JUDGMENT.—In this case a preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Nagpur, against the present two appellants and Pilaji, the son of the second appellant, Venkatrao. The respondents Nos. 6 and 7 were joined as subsequent mortgagees. The case was compromised and a decree was passed accordingly for payment of the decretal amount of Rs. 8,056.

The first five plaintiff-respondents applied for decree (final) on 12th December 1924,

The second appellant Venkatrao applied for an extension of time on 20th November 1924. In that application he stated that he had arranged to deposit Rs. 1,500 for payment to the decree holders and on the ground that he had been ill throughout the year and that the harvest had been poor, he asked for an extension of six months' time. Eventually, on 3rd August 1925 the Subordinate Judge, finding that the two subsequent mortgagees were willing to pay off the entire amount of the decree within 15 days, allowed time accordingly until the 24th of August 1925. The present appellants had at this hearing offered the deposit of a further sum of Rs. 2,000, but the Subordinate Judge did not grant the prayer of the appellants.

For my own part, I do not think this is a case where I would be entitled to interfere in favour of the appellants. This was not a case of an ordinary foreclosure decree with the normal period of six months allowed for payment. On the contrary, under the compromise a special period of a year was granted and even by August 1925 the present appellants were only able or willing to pay Rs. 3,500 at the most.

It has, indeed, been urged on the strength of the decisions in Hemendra Lal Singh Deo v. Fakir Chandra Datta (1) and Nripendra-nath Chatterjee v. Jhumak Mandar (2) that it was not open to the Court in the present case to grant an extension of time. The latter case is very much to the point and I think this contention offered on behalf of the decree-holders is undoubtedly correct. cf. also Komalsingh v. Jagannath Muratsingh (3) which deals with the question of extension of time for payment of the decretal amount and the inapplicability of s 148 of the C. P. C. in such a matter. It is true that the decree-holders consented to 15 days' extension in order to permit of the subsequent mortgagees paying up the amount but that was all.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed, as it seems impossible to show the present appellants any more leniency or latitude in the matter of extension of time for payment. The case will now go back to the Executing Court and after it reaches there a period of at least 15 days should suit and dismissed it. The Additional Subordinate Judge was of a contrary opinion and ordered the suit to go on.

He relied on two cases, Savala Cunniah Chetty v. Thiruvengada Ramanujachariar (1) and Kadambi Srinivasachari v. Durlabha Subuddhi (2). Both of these decisions were given in suits instituted when the C. P. C. of 1882 was in force. When the amended Act of 1908 came into force, it contained a new provision in cl. (2) of s. 92 barring suits in respect of charitable and religious trusts without first obtaining the permission of the Advocate-General.

We have been referred in the course of the arguments to two other cases, Subramania Aiyar v. Nagarathna Naicker (3) and Rangaswami Nayudu v. Krishnaswami Aiyar (4). These were cases in which a number of persons had a common interest in a temple or charitable institution, and a representative suit was allowed by the Court to be brought on behalf of all, under s. 30 of the Code of 1882 (now O. I. r. 8). When a village temple is owned in common by all the villagers of a certain village, this is the proper form of suing. In the present case the founder of the trust appointed himself as manager during his lifetime and his heirs after his death. His widow, who is second defendant, is his nearest heir, and as she alienated the trust property, she cannot be transposed as plaintiff. The reversioner cannot claim at present to be trustee. The proper course is for the plaintiff, together with one or more interested persons, after obtaining the required sanction under s. 92 to sue for 2nd defendant's removal from the trusteeship, and for appointment of himself or some other fit person to be trustee in her place. In such a suit the validity of the alienation could be decided.

The person who becomes trustee or a receiver appointed in the suit may then sue on behalf of the idol for the recovery of the property improperly diverted from trust purposes. It is suggested that we might allow some time for the plaintiff to apply and get permission to proceed either under O. I. r. 8 or under s. 92, C. P. C., but we think that this cannot be done as this would alter the nature of the suit. The

C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920), Sch. II, Art. 1—“Holding,” whether includes part—Suit for possession of part of holding—Limitation.

The word “holding” in Art. 1 of Sch. II to the C. P. Tenancy Act, includes a part of a holding and a suit for possession of a part of a holding must, therefore, be brought within two years of the date of dispossession or exclusion from possession. [p. 825, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 12th January 1925, in Civil Appeal No. 176 of 1924.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent Sonkuar Bai was the co-tenant of an occupancy holding with the second defendant Ramdayal Chamar, who sold the entire holding to the first defendant, Thakur Singh, on the 11th of June 1920. The latter took possession of it on that date, and Sonkuar Bai filed this suit for recovery of possession of her half share on the 1st of August 1924, joining Ramdayal as a formal defendant. In the first Court the suit was held to be barred by time under Art. 1 of Sch. II of the Tenancy Act. In appeal the learned Additional District Judge started with the remark that there was no substance in the argument, rejected in the first Court, that Art. 1 of Sch. II has no application to a suit for joint possession.

But the learned Judge then goes on to say that the facts of the present case “are admittedly different,” for the reason that “it is not from the entire holding that the dispossession or exclusion has taken place but from only a portion of the holding and the question is whether Art. 1 will bar such a suit." The suit is for joint possession to the extent of a half of the entire holding, along with Ramdayal's transferee Thakur Singh, whom Sonkuar had to recognise and did recognise as her co-tenant.

In the judgment of the lower Appellate Court it is eventually held, after discussion of the point that the word holding in the Article mentioned can only mean the whole of a holding and cannot mean a part of one, and that a tenant dispossessed of a part only of his holding can sue for recovery of possession within twelve years. The decision is of course quite outside the case, but I think it advisable to show that it is wrong. The learned Judge arrived at it with diffidence as it was directly contrary to that given by this Court in Budga v. Chain (1).

I have to admit that I have difficulty in understanding exactly what the reasons given by the learned Judge mean, and to say also that on reading again the reasons for the contrary view in my judgment in Budga v. Chain (1) I am still satisfied of their cogency. But several additional reasons in support of the same view can easily be discovered. All the reasons given by the learned Judge, as far as I understand them, for thinking that the holding mentioned in Art. 1 of the Schedule is the entire holding and not a part of it apply equally to the same word appearing in Art 9 of the same Schedule. But there it undoubtedly refers to a holding "or any portion thereof", as is clear from s. 100 of the Act.

Again if in this case the whole does not include the part, then the same must be said of at least sixty Articles in the Schedule of the Limitation Act. For instance, the litigation for a suit to set aside the sale of a part of a patni taluq for current arrears of rent would not be one year under Art 12 (d) and that for a part of the price of goods sold and delivered, a part having been paid, would not be three years under Art 52, in each case we would have to fall back on Art. 120.

The order of the lower Appellate Court remanding the case for trial will be set aside and a decree will issue dismissing the suit. The plaintiff-respondent will pay all the costs in all three Courts. There has been something worse than the usual carelessness in the matter of Pleader's fee in this case, and the learned Judge of each of the lower Courts has been guilty of saying that in his opinion a fair amount for the successful party to be paid on account of the expense to which he was wrongly put in the matter of employing a Pleader, is eight annas. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be thirty rupees.

Appeal from a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 18th February 1924.

Mr Bisheshar Nath, for the Appellant

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Unao, dated 18th February 1924, partly affirming and partly reversing a decree of the Munsif of Unao, dated the 3rd August 1923.

The dispute in this case relates to the property of one Ram Rakhan who died on the 22nd February 1910. His sister, Musammatt Subedha, took possession of the property left by him. She was no heir under the Hindu Law and her possession was that of a trespasser. The nearest heirs of Ram Rakhan according to the proximity in degree were Sat Narain and his brother Ram Dayal. They joined with themselves their nephew Ajodhya Prasad in suing Musammatt Subedha for possession of the property left by Ram Rakhan. They succeeded in getting a decree for possession of the property on the 14th December 1911. The decree was passed on the basis of a compromise. They obtained possession through Court on the 22nd December 1911 and mutation was effected in their favour on the 28th March 1912. The plaintiff's case is that these three persons had no title to the property as they were born lepers. They being disqualified, there were 5 persons (including the plaintiff) in the same degree who were entitled to the property of Ram Rakhan under the Hindu Law. Three of them, namely, Sheo Dularey (defendant No. 3), Gur Din (defendant No. 4) and Durga Prasad brought a suit against Ram Dayal and others, and got a decree for 3/5ths of the property on the 23th February 1913. Then the fourth man, namely, Salt Narain (defendant No. 5) sued for a 1/5th share and obtained a decree on the 29th January 1914. Thus 4/5ths of the property was recovered by the rightful persons from Ram Dayal and others named above. The plaintiff claims the remaining 1/5th of the property. Ram Dayal died having executed a Will in favour of his daughter, Musammatt Ram Dulari, (defendant No. 6) on the 30th July 1918. The defendant No. 7 is the husband of Musammatt Ram Dulari. The defendants Nos. 6 and 7 got possession of the property comprised in the Will. The plaintiff brought the present suit on the 17th November 1922. The suit was contested by the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 alone and proceeded ex parte against others. The suit was decreed by the first Court on the 3rd August 1923. However, it was dismissed so far as a 1/15th share in Ram Rakhan's property is concerned, on the defendants Nos. 6 and 7's appeal, on the 18th February 1924. The defendants Nos. 6 and 7 had appealed to the extent of a 1/15th share and the present appeal has been filed by the plaintiff. The respondents have failed to appear in this Court.

There is only one question for determination in this appeal and that question is one of limitation. That question was decided in favour of the plaintiff by the first Court. However, it was decided against the plaintiff by the Court of first appeal. The suit was of course instituted more than 12 years after Ram Rakhan's death but it was instituted within 12 years of the date on which the decree was obtained by Ram Dayal and others against Musammatt Subedha. It was instituted within twelve years of the date on which Ram Dayal and others got possession of the property under the decree dated 14th December 1911. The question is whether the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 who derived their title from Ram Dayal are entitled to tack in to the period of their own and Ram Dayal's possession the period during which Musammatt Subedha remained in possession of the property after the death of Ram Rakhan. In my opinion they cannot do so. I have examined the pleadings and the compromise in the former suit in which the decree was passed against Musammatt Subedha. So far as I see, Ram Dayal and others had got the decree in recognition of their rights. They do not derive their title or their liability to be sued from Musammatt Subedha. They being lepers had no right to the property under the Hindu Law and they derived their liability to be sued from that circumstance. Those persons and Musammatt Subedha were independent trespassers and possession of independent trespassers cannot be tacked [see the principle of decision in the case of Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (1)]. As pointed out in the case of Janaki Nath Saha v. Baikuntha Nath Ghattack (2) one trespasser cannot add to his own possession the previous independent possession of another trespasser. When the possession passes from the first to the second trespasser, there is a constructive restoration, even if a momentary restoration, of the true title to possession.

(2) 70 Ind. Cas. 602; 36 C. L. J. 140, A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 176; 27 C. W. N. 259.

The present suit is a suit falling within Art. 144 of the Limitation Act. Where a plaintiff sues on the strength of his title without any reference to prior possession or dispossession, in such a case it would seem that on the proper construction of Art. 144, the plaintiff would be entitled to succeed on proof of his title, unless the defendant is able to displace it by proof of adverse possession by himself or his predecessor-in-title for the whole statutory period. It is noticeable that adverse possession was not set up by the defendants Nos 6 and 7. In their defence in this case they had contended simply that the plaintiff and his ancestors had never been in possession of the property and hence the suit was barred by time. In a suit falling within Art. 144 the initial onus on plaintiff is to establish his title and he is not under an obligation to prove his possession within 12 years of the suit. On the contrary when the plaintiff's title has been proved or is admitted, the burden is on defendant to establish that he, or persons through whom he claims, has or have been in possession adverse to the plaintiff for over 12 years before the suit. The defendant must also prove when his possession became adverse. It is settled that the onus of establishing title to property by reason of possession for a certain requisite period lies on the person asserting such possession. [Secretary of State for India v. Chelakani Rama Rao (3)] "An owner of property does not lose his right to property merely because he happens not to be in possession of it for 12 years. Under s 23 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, his right is only extinguished at the determination of the period limited by the Act to him for instituting a suit for possession of property; that period cannot be determined unless it has commenced to run, and the period will not commence to run until the owner is aware that some one else in possession is holding adversely to himself". [See Swamirao Shrinivas Parvati v. Bhimabai Dadappa Dasari (4)]. In the present case, the suit was instituted within 12 years of the date on which Ram Dayal and others obtained a decree against Musammam Subedha and got possession of the property in execution of the decree. I have already observed that these persons and Musammam Subedha were independent trespasser and they could not add to their possession the previous independent possession of another trespasser. Under these circumstances I think the learned Munsif was perfectly right in deciding the question of limitation in favour of the plaintiff.

Hence I allow the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court restore the decree of the first Court and also in the lower Appellate Court. The appellant will get his costs from the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 in this Court and also in the lower Appellate Court. He will get his costs in the first Court as ordered by that Court.

JUDGMENT.

Oggers, J.—The question in this case is whether an alienation by a de facto guardian is valid under the Hindu Law. The person in question is the maternal uncle of the plaintiff and of course is neither the natural nor the legal guardian. The District Munsif dismissed the suit which was a claim for a declaration that the alienation made during the minority of the plaintiff did not bind him. The Subordinate Judge reversed this decision holding that the alienation made by the maternal uncle was a void transaction.

It has been argued at length for the respondents that a de facto guardian is unrecognised in the Hindu Law. It may be at once said that, if there is such a recognition, I am satisfied that the recognition is more or less modern and possibly to some extent, the recognition, if it is legally recognised at all has come about by necessity. The earliest case, as far as I know, is the well-known case in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1) where their Lordships of the Privy Council say:—"Upon the third point, it is to be observed that under the Hindu Law, the right of a bona fide incumbrancer who has taken from a de facto manager a charge on lands created honestly, for the purpose of saving the estate, or for the benefit of the estate, is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager) affected by the want of union of the de facto, with the de jure title." It has been said that this dictum is obiter as the Rani in the case under discussion was undoubtedly the natural guardian. It might perhaps also be said that the third point was not absolutely essential to the decision. However that may be, any dicta that may fall from the Privy Council are naturally entitled to great weight and, if the powers of a de facto guardian under the Hindu Law have been recognised in other decisions, it must, I think, be taken that a de facto guardian is known to that law. Much stress has been laid for the respondents on the Privy Council case in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (2) where it is clearly laid down that a de facto guardian is unknown in the Muhammadan Law. The decisions of the Courts on this point of Muhammadan Law are fully examined and in their Lordships' judgment delivered by Mr. Ameer Ali. A person who may be conveniently called a de facto guardian has no power under the Muhammadan Law to convey to another any right or interest in immoveable property which the transferee can enforce against the infant. Nothing can be clearer than that. But it has to be observed that not only there but all through the judgment only the question as arising under the Muhammadan Law is dealt with. On the other hand, in Gour's Hindu Code, s. 906, it is asserted that the powers of a natural and de jure guardian are the same as those of a legal guardian. Any act done by the de facto guardian would be equally binding on the minor if it is supported by necessity or benefit to the minor. See also s. 913 where the learned author expressly states that the Muhammadan Law is different.

In Mohanund Mondul v. Nafur Mondul (3) a grandmother purported to sell a minor's estate. The Court found that she was a de facto guardian, and relying on Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1), it held that not only might a de facto guardian mortgage but also sell. Binnerji, J., points out that there may be cases where the sale of a part of the minor's estate might be more beneficial to him than a mortgage. In Adhar Chandra Dutt v. Kirtibash Bairage (4) it is said in the judgment; "It is conceded by the learned Doctor who appeared for the appellants that the powers of a de facto guardian are the same as those of a legal guardian." It appears that the Court adopted that admission which was that of Dr. Rash Behari Ghose. In Bai Amrit v. Bai Manik (5) which is a case of a transaction by the mother as guardian of her son and of her minor daughter-in law, she would of course be the natural guardian of the son, but the case is treated as if she was the manager de facto of the family and sales for valuable consideration the proceeds of which were applied to meet the family necessities were held to be unquestionable. Nathuram v. Shoma Chhagan (6) was a case of the father's cousin taking charge of a minor and borrowing money to meet the funeral expenses of the deceased father. It was held that he had sufficient authority to bind the minor by a loan if it were necessary. Sadasiva Iyer, J., in Vembu Iyer v. Srinivasa Iyengar (7) citing Hunooman Persaud Panday v. Babooee Munna Koonweree (1) says that, when the act is done by the person who is not the guardian but who is the manager of the estate in which the minor is interested, the latter will equally be bound if under the circumstances the step taken was necessary, proper or prudent.

On the other hand, no case has been cited, except possibly one which lays down that a de facto guardian has no power to deal with the property of a minor for necessity. On the other hand in Arunachella Reddi v. Chidambara Reddi (8) it is said. "It is well settled that an alienation may be validly made by a de facto guardian (assuming, of course, the necessity)" It is true that there the guardian in question was a natural guardian. But, in my view, having regard to the authorities I have cited, that can make no difference.

Krishnan Chetty v. Vellaichami Thevan (9) which was referred to by the learned Vakil for the respondents, merely lays down that, once a guardian has been appointed by the Court, the rights of the natural guardian are extinguished. It will be noticed at page 41* the learned Judges say that there is no proof that the first defendant's mother was the de facto guardian. In Gopi Ram v. Jeot Ram (10) the mother did not mortgage the property on behalf of her son and no question of necessity arose. Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (11) is again, like Imabandi v. Mut-saddi (2) a case under the Muhammadan Law. The family were Muhammadans and were governed by the Muhammadan Law relating to guardianship. It is pointed out by their Lordships that the question was whether, according to Muhammadan Law, a sale by a de facto guardian if made for necessity and if beneficial to the minor is altogether void or merely voidable but it was unnecessary to decide the question, as the appellant had not shown that the sale was for necessity or was beneficial to the minor. Reliance is also placed for the respondent on a remark of Sadasiva Iyer, J., in Thayammal v. Kuzpanna Koundan (12) "that nobody else than the father and mother of a minor (with probable exceptions in favour of the elder brother and the direct male and female ancestors of the minor) is entitled as a matter of natural right to be and to act as a guardian of a minor's person, and property. Recourse must be had to the Court (representing the rights of the King which are paramount to even the rights of the parents) where there is natural guardian alive." I am unable, to see how this helps the respondent in the present case as the relation in question is, therefore, a direct male ancestor of the minor. The decision was that the paternal aunt was not a natural guardian. A decision much relied on is Nalannad v. Kanbirampare Ravuni Nair (13) by a Single Judge of this Court where in the case of a nambudri illom, the step-mother of the minors, who was managing the house-hold and looking after them, borrowed money, for necessity. On the assumption that the parties were prima facie governed by Hindu Law and that no special custom had been set up in the pleadings, it was held that the step-mother had no legal authority. The learned Judge said; "It is not contended ... that the de facto guardianship gave her i.e., the step mother any right to mortgage the estate." With great deference I am unable to see first how the dictum applies to the facts of this case and secondly, if necessary, I would take leave to say that if the parties were governed by the Hindu Law, I should have thought it might have been well contended that the mortgage, if for necessity, could be upheld.

The Court below has found that, as to one of the sales evidenced by Ex. IV which is the only one question before us, there was necessity to the extent of Rs. 275 out of a total consideration for Rs. 400. It is said by the appellants that there has been a ratification by Ex. III by the minor on attaining his age of this alienation by his de facto guardian. On the other hand, it is said that any alienation not for necessity is void and not voidable and as there can be no ratification of a void transaction it is of no effect in this case. It is, I think, clear that an alienation by a de jure guardian or a natural guardian is voidable and, as I am inclined to hold the powers of these guardians are similar, I think a transaction entered into by a de facto guardian not for necessity is only voidable and, therefore, ratified by the minor attaining his age. In Chetty Culum Comara Venkatachella Reddyer v. Rajah Rungasawmy Streemunth Iyengar Bahadur (14) the minor recognised a transaction made during his minority by his adoptive mother and guardian. This was upheld without determining the question as to the power of a Hindu widow as guardian to create a charge during the minority of the minor son.

Further, it is said that this suit is barred by limitation. The sale is dated 28th February 1907. The suit was brought on the first March 1919 which is admittedly the last day of the 12 years allowed. But it is said in the letter, Ex. III, that the transferee had had possession delivered to him sometime before the date of the sale deed. The words which have been re-translated are "whether before the delivery of possession to you in pursuance of the sale before now or after." The words "before now" are indefinite, but they might refer to possession being given on the same day. There is further some contention on the other side that these persons were already in possession as tenants. However that may be, the matter is much too indefinite for us to attach the slightest weight to those words. I, therefore, think that this point fails. This question of limitation, though dealt with by the District Munsif and found in favour of the defendants was not considered by the learned Subordinate Judge. In my view, there is nothing in the point

I think the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in holding that the alienation made by the de facto guardian is a void transaction. In my view, the appeal must be allowed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Viswanatha Sastri, J.—Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are the appellants. The suit was for a declaration that the alienations made by plaintiff's maternal uncle during his minority were not binding on him, and for recovery of the items alienated.

The alienations were made under two sale-deeds of the dates 28th February 1907 (Ex. IV) and 7th October 1913, and the suit was instituted (it was said on the last day of limitation) in 1919. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, and on appeal the Subordinate Judge gave plaintiff a decree for possession. The contentions urged in second appeal are:—

(1) That the alienations by way of sale, by the natural uncle who was not the de jure guardian of plaintiff were void, and

(2) that the suit was barred by limitation with respect to the items covered by Ex. IV, as defendants were placed in possession prior to the date of Ex. IV.

The second appeal first came on for hearing before Ramesam, J., who referred it to a Bench "as the matter (which forms the subject matter of the first contention) was not concluded by authority so far as the Hindu Law is concerned."

It was argued before us that under the Hindu Law, the father, the mother and failing them the King, were the guardians of an infant; that no other relation was the guardian; that de facto guardians were no better than intermeddlers; and that alienations by de facto guardians were void as was laid down by the Privy Council in Imabandi v. Mutsaddi (2). That case related to a Muhammadan minor; their Lordships based their decision on Muhammadan Law texts; and so far as I am able to see, I do not find reference in the judgment to any decided cases concerning Hindu minors. Alienations by the de facto guardians of Hindu minors have come up very frequently before Courts, and our attention has not been directed to any decided case in which it has been held that such alienation was per se void, apart from any question as to whether it was for legal necessity or not. It was said that this may be due to the fact that the point was not raised in those cases but, as observed by Maclean, C. J., in Mohammad Mondul v. Nafur Mondul (3) "the absence of judicial authority suggests that the point has not been regarded as open to serious argument."

So far as Hindu Law goes, it appears to me that there is nothing in it which limits guardianship only to the father, the mother, and failing them the king. Macnaghten in his Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law says "that in default of the father and mother an elder brother of a minor is competent to assume the guardianship of him. In default of such brother the paternal relations generally are entitled to hold the office of guardian, and failing such relations, the office devolves on the maternal kinsmen, according to their degree of proximity, but the appointment of guardian universally rests with the ruling power." (See Vol. I, pages 103, 104). And in Vol II (Precedents) Case III at page 204 gives the opinion of parents based on the authority of the Dayabhaga Dayatatwa, Dayakrama Sangraha that the husband's sister's son is the guardian of a childless widow, who is a minor. It was said that in the absence of the father and mother, "recourse must be had to the Court (representing the rights of the king which are paramount to even the rights of the parents where there is no natural guardian alive" as observed by Sadasiva Iyer, J, in Thayammal v. Kuppanma Koundan (12). But it must be remembered that the learned Judge in the previous sentence includes among natural guardians the elder brother and the direct male and female ancestors of the minor, although according to respondents' Vakils, they would not be the natural guardians under Hindu Law. Applications to Courts can only be made under the Guardians and Wards Act, and it has been held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Ram Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Brojonath Mozumdar (15) that this act would not affect or alter any provision of Hindu Law as to guardians who do not avail themselves of the act. It is true that in that case the person who acted as guardian of the minor was the mother; but this circumstance would not, in my opinion, make any difference. Coming to decided cases, it was held in Mohamud Mondul v. Nafur Mondul (3) on the authority of the Privy Council case in Hunooman Persand Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1) that a sale by a de facto guardian (it was the grandmother, in case of necessity) was valid. And in Arunachella Reddi v. Chidambara Reddi (8) White, C. J., and Benson, J., held that "it is well settled that an alienation may be validly made by a de facto guardian (assuming, of course, the necessity)." In Tirapayya Mallidi v. Ramaswami (16) it was held that a natural mother was a "lawful guardian" for the purpose of s 21 of the Limitation Act, even though there was a testamentary guardian named in the Will of the adoptive father who was unwilling to act. In Nathuram v. Shoma Chhagan (6) a debt contracted by the father's cousin for necessary purposes was held to bind the owner. Although it is no authority in the sense of its being a judicial decision, I may state that in Adhar Chandra Dutt v. Kirtivasa Birage (4) such an eminent lawyer as Dr. Rash Behary Gosh conceded that the powers of a de facto guardian (of a Hindu) were the same as those of a de jure guardian. Our attention was drawn to the observations of Sadasiva Iyer, J, in Thayammal v. Kuppanma Koundan (12) wherein the learned Judge holds that "Under Hindu Law, nobody else than the father and mother of a minor (with probable exceptions in favour of the elder brother and the direct male and female ancestors of the minor) is entitled as a matter of natural right to be and to act as a guardian of a minor person and properties." In that case the alienation by the paternal aunt was found to be "for no necessity" and the second appeal could have been decided only on this finding without considering the question under Hindu Law. I may also state that the "probable exceptions" which the learned Judge recognises, supports the view that guardianship under the Hindu Law is not confined only to the father, mother, and the king, as contended for by respondent's Vakils. The learned Judge relies on the decisions of the Calcutta High Court Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kadermoye Dossee (17) and Bhikno Koer v. Chamela Koer (18) in support of his view. They were both cases in which the Court was moved to appoint a guardian, and there was no question as to the binding nature of an alienation made by de facto guardian. It may here be stated that the case in Mohanand Mondul v. Nafar Mondul (3) is referred to with approval by Sadasiva Iyer, J., Vembu Iyer v. Srinivasa Iyengar (7). Reference was made to a case in Nalannad v. Panbirampare Ravuni Nair (13) where a Single Judge of the Court held that a de facto guardian of a Hindu Nambudri minor a (step-mother) was no better than an intermeddler, and had no right to represent a minor. It does not appear that any of the cases referred to here were brought to the notice of the learned Judge. Decisions under the Muhammadan Law have no bearing on the present question; and I am clearly of opinion that the right of a de facto guardian to deal with the property of a Hindu minor has been recognised by our Courts ever since the decision of the Privy Council in Hunoomanpersand Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1) provided the alienation was for necessity.

I may here state that in the present case the de facto guardian was the maternal uncle who took charge of the minor after his mother's death; and the evidence of D. W. No. 1 is to the effect that the paternal aunt with whom the minor was for a time was not in a position to maintain herself. So far as Hindu society in South India goes the maternal uncle is treated as the closest relation of a person next to his father and mother; and at all ceremonies at which presents are given, it is his that is first handed over.

Appellant's Vakil next contended that the alienations now sought to be set aside were ratified by plaintiff; and that they were, therefore, valid; apart from any question of maternal uncle being only the de facto guardian. Exhibits II and III are two letters passed on by plaintiff to the vendees on 9th November 1918, wherein he approved of the sale-deeds of the dates 7th October 1913 and 1st March 1907. That such a ratification would make the alienation binding will be clear from the decision in Chetty Colum Comara Vencatachella Reddyer v. Rajah Rungasawmy Streemunth Iyengar Bahadoor (14).

It was also urged before us that so far as the alienation under Ex. IV went, the suit was barred by limitation, as possession was, as stated in it, given before its date (28th February 1907); that the evidence was that it was given during the previous cultivation season (August 1906); and that time ran from August 1906. The question under Art 144 of the Limitation Act would be, when the possession became adverse to the plaintiff. The District Munsif held that it became adverse when possession was given, but the Sub-Judge did not consider this question. Since possession was given in view of a contemplated sale, it cannot be said that it became adverse to the vendor from the date it was given in case the sale was held not binding on the minor.

The sale to the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 has been found by both Courts to be binding to the extent of Rs. 275, and the sale to the 5th defendant has been held to be wholly binding. In my view the effect of the ratification evidenced by Ex. III is to make the sale to the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 wholly binding on plaintiff.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, and reversing the decree of the Court below, dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, in Remand Appeal No. 78 of 1933, dated the 3rd March 1925, upholding that of the Munsif, Sultanpur, in Regular Civil Suit No. 45 of 1923, dated the 10th of April 1923.

Mr. Radha Kishan, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. K. Ghose and Mr. M. H. Qidari for Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendants' appeal in the suit brought by the respondent for redemption of the mortgage of the 14th of April 1881 in respect of a 4-annas share in village Jalili, Pargana Jagdispur, in the District of Sultanpur. This mortgage was made by Musammatt Gulaba in favour of one Chauharja Bakhsh. Musammatt Gulaba is now represented by her daughter, Musammatt Maharajia, the plaintiff-respondent and the defendants-respondents are the representatives of the original mortgagor, Chauharja Bakhsh. There were several defences to this simple suit for redemption but they have all been set at rest by conclusive decisions of this Court and of the Courts below except the defence that the claim for redemption was barred by the 12 years' adverse possession of the mortgagee and his representatives over the mortgaged property.

The lower Court in disposing of this defence observes that only a feeble and short argument was advanced in support of that plea. We can say the same of the arguments addressed to us. Our attention was drawn to certain proceedings which arose in the year 1893 on the application of Musammatt Gulaba in the Courts of Revenue, dated the 17th of August 1893 by which she prayed for the entry of her name in respect of the property in suit in the column of proprietors. The predecessor-in-interest of the defendants made a statement in reply to Musammatt Gulaba's prayer that his father's name had stood in the khewat in respect of the entire village and that since the death of his father the entry had been made in his own name. We do not think that these events have the effect of converting the mortgagee's possession into that of hostile possession as against the interests of the mortgagor. The possession originally and admittedly commenced under the contract of mortgage of the 14th of April 1881. "As between the mortgagor and the mortgagee neither exclusive possession by the mortgagee for any length of time short of the statutory period of sixty years, nor any acquiescence by the mortgagor not amounting to a release of the equity of redemption will be a bar or defence to a suit for redemption if the parties are otherwise entitled to redeem." Khai- rajmal v. Daim (1). We conceive no evidence of release of the equity of redemption in the present case.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Per Madhavan Nair, J.—An attachment is a measure resorted to for the protection of the decree-holder and the purchaser against intermediate alienation and is only a step to be taken by the Executing Court in bringing to sale the properties of a judgment-debtor. ### JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The respondent having attached the appellant's immoveable properties before judgment, obtained a decree for Rs. 2,224-12-0 against him and his mother on 28th January 1919. Afterwards he applied through E. P. No. 35 of 1924 for sale of the properties which were attached before judgment. In the interval two petitions for executing the same decree had been rejected owing to the execution petitioner's fault. The appellant filed C. M. P. No. 722 of 1924 on November 18th 1924, asking (1) that the auction-sale fixed for November 24th, 1924, should be stopped, (2) that the whole proceedings in the pending E. P. R. No. 35 should be vacated, and (3) that E. P. R. No. 35 should be dismissed. The Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore refused these reliefs and dismissed the C. M. P. From that order the appellant has filed an appeal and a revision petition to the High Court on March 2nd, 1925. The sale took place on February 9th, 1925, and awaits the lower Court's order of confirmation under O. XXI, r. 92, C. P. C. The appellant's Vakil contends that the attachment of the property ceased by virtue of O. XXI, r. 57, upon the dismissal for default of the prior execution petitions, the attachment before judgment being good only until the first execution petition after the passing of the decree was dismissed [Vide Meyappa Chettiar v Chidambaram Chettiar (1)], and that the sale of the property without a previous subsisting attachment was illegal.

In my opinion there is a short answer to this appeal and the accompanying revision petition. The sale having already taken place the judgment-debtor's remedy lies in applying under r. 90, of O. XXI to have it set aside, and from the order to be passed by the Executing Court he will have a right of appeal to this Court under O. XLII, r. 1 (j), C. P. C.

It is too late to stop the sale after it has taken place and at the same time it would be premature on the part of this Court to set aside the sale, the power to do so being vested in the first instance in the Executing Court. The appellant did not obtain an order from the High Court to stay the sale before it was concluded. We should not make a declaration or pronouncement of opinion as to the validity of a sale while proceedings for confirming or setting it aside are pending in the Court below, and there is no room for our interfering otherwise with the course of the execution petition which will be finally disposed of only when final orders are passed under r. 92 and when it is known to what extent the decree has been satisfied. The fact that there is no right of appeal provided in the C. P. C. against orders under O. XXI, rr. 64 and 66 for sale of property indicates that such orders are of an interlocutory nature. The appealability of an order for sale was raised in Namuna Bibi v. Koshun Meah (2) but not argued with assurance vide page 486*. The learned Judges considered that an appeal lay under s. 47, C. P. C., as it was a question between the parties in execution. This Court has applied s. 47 to applications to set aside a sale that has been illegally held, apart from irregularities in publishing or conducting it [vide Anantharama Iyer v. Vettath Kuttimalu Kovilamma (3), and Mathiah Chettiar v. Bawa Sahib (4)]. But the petition of November 18th, out of which this appeal and revision petition have arisen, was not a petition to set aside a sale, as no sale had been held when it was presented. The order of the Subordinate Judge dismissing it was passed before any sale was held and thus it cannot be treated as an order upon an application under s. 47 to set aside an illegal sale. The grounds upon which the judgment-debtor tried to stop the sale were that the previous execution petitions were dismissed and that their dismissal put an end to the attachment. He did not then raise the contention which he has raised here, viz., that the attachment before judgment only enures for the first execution application after decree. If the judgment debtor had put forward this objection before the sale took place, the decree-holder might have overcome the difficulty by applying for a fresh attachment of the lands. After the sale had been held, it does not appear that he made an attempt to have the sale set aside by the Sub-Judge under s. 47 as illegal for want of a fresh attachment upon this ground, which has not been considered in the Judge's order of November 29th 1924, and the present appeal cannot be treated as an appeal against an order which the Sub Judge might have made, if such a contention had been put forward at the proper time. For these reasons, I consider that the only order we can make is to dismiss the appeal with costs. The revision petition being only an alternative remedy to the appeal is dismissed without costs.

Madhavan Nair, J.—This appeal arises from an application made by the appellant-judgment-debtor objecting to the sale of certain properties in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 117 of 1918, Sub-Court, Coimbatore, on the ground that the properties in question had not been attached prior to the order for sale. The decree-holder, the respondent before us, had obtained a decree for money against the appellant and had attached the said properties before judgment. After the decree he filed two successive applications for execution which were returned by the Court for making some corrections and for the production of some papers. As the directions of the Court were not complied with these petitions were eventually dismissed. The decree-holder afterwards filed E. P. No. 35 of 1922 for the execution of his decree by sale of the properties and the sale was fixed for the 24th November 1924. When the appellant became aware of the said execution petition he applied to the Sub-Court in E. A. No. 722 of 1924 praying "to stop the sale fixed for 24th November 1924 and to vacate the whole proceedings in E. P. R. No. 35 of 1924 and to dismiss the petition and to pass such other and further orders as may be just and necessary." The Subordinate Judge held that since the two petitions which were dismissed for non-compliance with the Court's order could not be considered as execution petitions in accordance with law, their rejection could not operate to vacate the existing attachment under O. XXI, r. 57, C. P. C., and that, therefore, no re-attachment was necessary to bring the properties to sale. In this view he held that there was no need to stop the sale or to dismiss the execution petition (E. P. R. No. 35 of 1924) and that the respondent has rightly brought the attached properties to sale. The properties have since been sold and purchased by the decree-holder.

It is urged by the appellant that the petitions which were dismissed were execution petitions in accordance with law, that since they were dismissed for the default of the decree-holder, the attachment of the properties had ceased under O. XXI, r. 57, C. P. C., and that as no further attachment was made, the order of the Subordinate Judge to proceed with the sale of the properties should be set aside. Besides supporting the order of the learned Judge on the reasons contained in it, the respondent in this Court has put forward an additional ground in further support of the order, namely, that even if the attachment has ceased under O. XXI, r. 57, C. P. C., the failure to re-attach the properties prior to the sale is only an irregularity and not an illegality vitiating the sale, and that unless the Court is satisfied that the petitioner sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity the Court should not set aside the order. He has also argued that no appeal lies against the order passed by the Subordinate Judge under s. 47 of the C. P. C.

The questions for our consideration arising upon the above contentions of the respective parties are: (1) Are the petitions dismissed for default by the Subordinate Judge for non-compliance with his directions execution petitions in accordance with law? (2) Does O. XXI, r. 57, C. P. C., apply to the facts of this case? (3) If questions Nos. 1 and 2 are decided in favour of the appellant, is the sale of properties without an attachment void ab initio or is absence of attachment prior to sale only an irregularity? (4) Does an appeal lie against the order?

As regards question, No. 1, I have no doubt the opinion of the Subordinate Judge is clearly wrong. The respondent's learned Vakil himself has only very faintly attempted to support it. I have carefully examined the second petition dismissed for default by the Subordinate Judge. I am satisfied that it has complied with all the requirements demanded by the Code and that it is an application in accordance with law under O. XXI, r. 17, C. P. C. The paper that was called for but not produced for want of time, viz., the copy of the attachment list prepared by the amin, was not, as was seen subsequently absolutely necessary for proceeding with the execution of the decree.

in this case and it was found, when requisition for the same paper was made in E. P. No. 35 of 1924 also, and on which sale of the properties was afterwards ordered that the document called for had been destroyed. In fact, the order for sale of the properties now objected to was passed in E. P. No. 35 in the absence of this document. In these circumstances I am satisfied that the applications for execution were really in accordance with law and the Court could have passed orders on them to effectively carry out execution.

In the view that the applications dismissed for default are applications in accordance with law, the next question for us to consider is whether O. XXI, r. 57, C. P. C., applies to the facts of this case. According to that rule, when any property has been attached in execution of a decree and the application filed for execution has been dismissed by reason of the decree-holder's default, such dismissal will have the effect of vacating the attachment. In this case, as already mentioned, the properties had been attached before judgment. Order XXXVIII, r. 11, C. P. C., states that when a decree is subsequently passed it shall not be necessary upon an application for execution of such decree to apply for re-attachment of property. It has been held in Meyyappa Chettiar v. Chidambaram Chettiar (1) that O. XXI, r. 57, C. P. C., applies to cases where property had been attached before judgment and that if an execution application filed after the passing of the decree has been dismissed on account of the decree-holder's default, then the attachment ceases. Applications for executions in this case having been dismissed by reason of the decree-holder's default, it follows from the authority of this ruling that the attachment existing on the properties ceased and these, when ordered to be sold, were not under attachment. This conclusion renders it necessary to decide the third question raised by the parties, namely, whether the sale of properties in execution without an attachment is void ab initio.

In Sharoda Moyee Burmonee v. Wooma Moyee Burmonee (5) it was held by Jackson, J., that an attachment was not an essential preliminary in an execution sale. The reason for this view is thus stated by the learned Judge. "Attachment is a measure resorted to by the decree-holder for his own protection and the protection of purchasers of the property to be sold, and it consists in the case of immoveable property merely in a prohibition by the Court by which the judgment-debtor is restrained from alienating the property previous to the sale. This, therefore, being merely a measure for the protection of the decree-holder and the purchasers of the property, the absence of it is not, it appears to me, an objection which the judgment-debtor is competent to raise." In Baboo Luchmeput v. Baboo Lekraj Roy (6) the same Court held that a sale without attachment was irregular; but, as pointed out in Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahomed Mujaffar Hussain (7) "as that was a case of sale of moveable property, and the suit was one for damages, the Court was not called upon to decide whether the sale should be regarded as a nullity." Though the decision in Sharoda Moyee Burmonee v. Wooma Moyee Burmonee (5) was under the C. P. C. of 1859 which did not contain a provision corresponding to O. XXI, r. 64, of the present C. P. C., yet the reasoning of the learned Judge has been accepted and applied in deciding cases both under the Act of 1882 and under the present Code by our High Court. In Muniappa Naik v. Subramania Ayyan (8) on the ground that "the object of attachment is to take the property out of the disposition of the judgment-debtor" the learned Judges, Muthusami Iyer and Best, JJ., held that the omission to attach under s. 274 of Act XIV of 1882 was only an irregularity. In Ramasami Naik v. Ramaswamy Chetti (9) it was held for the same reason that the sale in execution of a decree is not invalid although there has been no attachment before sale as required by the Code. These decisions and the decisions in Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahomed Mujaffar Hussain (7) and Sheodhyan v. Bholanath (10) were followed by Sankaran Nair and Sadasiva Iyer, JJ., in Velayutha Muppan v. Subramanian Chetti (11) where they held that a sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree without the preliminary attachment is not null and void. This was a decision under the new Code. The latest reported decision of this Court is to be found in Sivakolundu Pillai v Ganapathy Iyer (12) where the learned Judges held that "attachment is only a step to be taken by the Executing Court in bringing to sale the properties of a judgment-debtor. If such a step is omitted the sale can be set aside only if it has resulted in substantial loss" and the absence of attachment does not affect the jurisdiction of the Executing Court to sell the immoveable property. Our High Court has thus held in a series of decisions both under the old Code and the present one that the absence of attachment does not affect the jurisdiction of the Executing Court to sell the property and that the sale on that account is not null and void. In Sheodhyan v Bholanath (10) the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court after an elaborate consideration of the object of attachment have also arrived at the same conclusion.

As against these decisions which, if accepted, would entail the dismissal of his appeal the learned Advocate-General relies upon a recent decision of the Calcutta High Court in Panchanan Das v. Kunja Behari (13) to the effect that a Court has no jurisdiction to sell a property in execution which had not been duly attached. The learned Judges base their conclusion upon a decision in Sorabji Coovarji v Kala Raghunath (14) some observations of the Privy Council in Raja Thakur Barmha v Jiban Ram Marwari (15) and upon the terms of O XXI, r. 64, C P C. It is to be noticed that the learned Judges do not in their judgment refer to the earlier decisions of their Court in Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahamed Mujaffar Hussain (7) and Hari Charan Singh v. Chandra Kunwar Dey (16) which held that a sale is not to be considered as a nullity merely by reason of the absence of any attachment.

The observations of Scott, C. J., in Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (14) that "property can only be brought to sale after it has been duly attached and if the attachment came to an end upon the payment into Court on the 22nd of September 1909 the property was not duly attached at the time of the sale in January 1910" no doubt support the contentions of the appellant. We do not find in the course of the judgment any discussion of the case-law bearing on the question, nor an answer to the reasoning on which the view of the Madras and the Allahabad High Courts is based, namely, that an attachment is a measure resorted to for the protection of the decree-holder and the purchaser against intermediate alienation, and is only a step to be taken by the Executing Court in bringing to sale the properties of a judgment-debtor.

It is conceded in the judgment that the decision of the Privy Council is not exactly in point, but the following remarks of Lord Moulton are referred to as indicating the view of their Lordships that the property can only be sold when it has been duly attached. "Their Lordships are of opinion that this is a very plain case. That which is sold in a judicial sale of this kind can be nothing but the property attached, and that property is conclusively described in and by the schedule to which the attachment refers." The facts of the case and their Lordship's decision will clearly show that these observations only mean that a certificate of sale cannot be granted in which the property described is different from the property attached and specified in the proclamation of sale. In that case the judgment debtor owned 16 annas share of a mahal of which 10 annas share was mortgaged while the remaining 6 annas were free from any mortgage. The proclamation of sale described the property to be sold as 6 annas share included in the mortgage. This was the property that was attached and sold in auction. An application was made on behalf of the auction-purchasers to obtain a sale certificate for the 6-annas share purchased by them at the auction. In making the application they alleged that a mistake had been made in the schedule of the property to be sold in that the word "not" had been omitted from the description of the 6 annas in question and that the property should have been described as being 6 annas not mortgaged. They claimed that their certificate should be made out as being a certificate of the purchase by them of the 6 unencumbered annas instead of, as described in the schedule, "6 annas subject to the existing mortgage." The Subordinate Judge granted them a certificate in the form in which they desired. This order upheld by the High Court was set aside by the Privy Council. After the extract from the judgment already referred to, their Lordships state. "In the present case the property was 6 annas subject to an existing mortgage. The effect of the certificate of sale granted by the order of the Subordinate Judge is to make the sale that of a property not attached, namely, the 6 unencumbered annas, a property which could not be sold in such proceedings inasmuch as it was not the property attached." Later on their Lordships say "in this case we have to deal with identity and not description." Their Lordships conclude thus:—"It was beyond the powers of the Court to make such an order inasmuch as there was no power to sell in these judicial proceedings the property thus certified to have been purchased." It will thus appear that the extract quoted from their Lordships' judgment in Panchonan Das v. Kunja Behari (13) was only meant to indicate that the Court has no power to include in the sale certificate properties not attached and sold. Their Lordships were not called upon to consider directly the question whether the absence of prior attachment will deprive a Court of its jurisdiction to sell the properties in execution of a decree. Thus understood, it appears to me that the dictum of the Privy Council cannot be relied upon in support of the appellant's arguments.

The terms of O. XXI, r. 64, C. P. C., no doubt show that the attachment would ordinarily precede a sale of the properties in execution. But, for the reasons mentioned, the decisions above referred to have held that the absence of such attachment would not vitiate a sale.

In Macnaghten v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (17) the question whether the notice of attachment not having been properly published would affect the sale or be an irregularity in conducting the sale, was raised before the Privy Council but was not gone into, inasmuch as that point was given up by the applicant at the trial before the Judge. In the absence of a definite pronouncement by their Lordships of the Privy Council I am not inclined to follow the decisions in Panchanan Das v. Kunja Behari (13) and Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (14) in preference to the long course of decisions of this Court. Following these decisions the sale in this case can be set aside only if the Court is satisfied that the appellant has sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity complained of, namely, the absence of attachment. It has not been argued before us that he has sustained any such substantial injury and he has also not asked us to adjourn the hearing of this case till the disposal of the application filed by him in the lower Court. It, therefore, follows that this appeal will have to be dismissed.

As I have decided to dismiss the appeal on the merits, I do not express any opinion as regards the "appealability" of the order passed by the Subordinate Judge.

In the result, the miscellaneous appeal is dismissed with costs. The connected civil revision petition is also dismissed but without costs. No orders are necessary on the stay petition.

JUDGMENT.—Second appeal by defendant against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad, in A. S. No. 100 of 1921.

The only question which has to be considered in this appeal is, whether the Courts below were right in decreeing the plaintiff's claim for contribution based upon s. 70 of the Indian Contract Act. A common channel irrigated the lands of the plaintiff and the defendant. The case of the plaintiff was that he repaired this channel after informing the defendant, and that the defendant was bound to contribute towards the repairs made. Both the Courts found that the repairs were done, that the defendant was benefited by the repair, and that the plaintiff did not intend to bear all the expenses himself.

It was urged before me on the authority of the decision in Sundara Aiyar v Ananthapadbhanaba Aiyar (1) that the plaintiff could not succeed, because he was also benefited by the act. Observations in Viswanadha Vijaya Kumara Bangaroo v. R. G. Orr (2) were also relied upon. Both the Courts have followed Damodara Mudaliar v. Secretary of State for India (3) which was a similar case. On the findings of the first Court and also on the findings of the lower Appellate Court, it appears to me to be clear that all the circumstances needed for the application of s. 70 of the Contract Act have been found to exist.

I, therefore, dismiss the second appeal with costs.

The period prescribed under Art 166 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act for an application to set aside a sale held in execution of a decree cannot be enlarged under the provisions of s. 5 of the Limitation Act

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 22nd January 1925.

Lala Amin Chand Mehta, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand and Lala Parkash Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor against an order disallowing his objections to the sale in execution of immoveable property and confirming the sale.

A preliminary point is raised by the respondent that the objections made by the appellant under O. XXI, r. 90, C. P. C., were not presented within time and therefore, there were no such objections and the Court was bound to confirm the sale under O. XXI, r 92, C P. C.

The period of limitation for an application under O XXI, r 90, is laid down in Art. 166, Limitation Act, and is thirty days from the date of sale. The sale took place on the 20th of December 1924 and the objections were filed in Court on the 21st of January 1925, two days beyond time. It has been laid down frequently by this and other High Courts that the period prescribed under Art. 166 cannot be enlarged under the provisions of s. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act or otherwise. Presumably it could be enlarged under s. 18 of the Limitation Act, but here neither in the objection petition nor in the present memorandum of appeal is any allegation of fraud made against the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser.

The preliminary objection must prevail and I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

This decision will also cover Appeal No. 721 of 1925.

The essential condition is that it should be a settlement in perpetuity or in other words, the ultimate end must be one that cannot fail. The mere use of the word "waqf" in an instrument cannot be separated from the context so as to convert a personal grant to a specified set of individuals into a public disposition. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Walsh, J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Subordinate Judge holding that a certain deed, dated the 27th of March 1880, purporting to be a deed of waqf, did not create a valid waqf. It is sufficient to say that this actual deed has already been on other occasions during the last seven years held to be invalid as a waqf by two subordinate Judges, one District Judge, and twice by two Judge Benches of this High Court, of one of which a member of this Bench was also a member. The last time it came before this Court was in 1923, when it was held to be a gift in favour of private individuals which the donor in the course of the document wrongly described as a waqf, by my Lord the present Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Piggott. The judgment in that case is reported as Muhammad Afzal v. Muhammad Mahmood (1). We agree with the view there taken, and in substance with the view taken by the Subordinate Judge in this case. Although the deed is in favour of a family of a pious teacher of the Muhammadian faith and not of the descendants of the donor, it seems to us that that distinction makes no difference, and that the deed offends against the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak v. Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhri (2). But in any event the fact that this High Court has twice pronounced against it, would be sufficient to justify us in not differing from the view of the Court below. This appeal must be dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Kanhaiya Lal, J.—I wish to add a few observations as to the main question discussed at the hearing regarding the construction to be placed on the disposition made by Nawab Muhammad Mahmud Ali Khan of Chhatari in favour of the sons and daughters of his preceptor and their descendants on the 17th of March 1880. It is contended that the disposition was made in favour of persons who were from a religious point of view the object of veneration, and that the object of the disposition could validly be regarded as a religious or charitable object within the meaning of the Muhammadian Law to render the disposition a valid waqf of the property comprised therein. One of the essential conditions of a valid disposition by way of waqf, however, is that it must be made in perpetuity. Waqf in its primitive sense means detention; but it implies detention of a thing in the implied ownership of the Almighty God in such a manner that its profits may revert to or be applied for the benefit of mankind, and the appropriation is obligatory so that the thing appropriated or set apart can neither be sold nor given nor inherited (Baillie's Muhammadan Law, Vol. I, page 558). The essential condition is that it should be a settlement in perpetuity or in other words, the ultimate end must be one that cannot fail (ibid pages 565 and 566). The object of a waqf must be charitable; or if the waqf is made for the support of one's descendants, it must include an ultimate dedication for religious, pious or charitable purposes; and in that respect it differs from a gift to particular individuals or their descendants. In the case of a waqf in favour of descendants, if the descendants fail, the disposition is liable to terminate, and the essential condition, namely, perpetuity, also fails. The instrument by which the disposition in this case was made provides that the grantees and their grandchildren, generation after generation, shall for ever enjoy the property without any limitation, except in so far that they shall have no power to transfer and hypothecate the property or to grant leases thereof for a period exceeding five years. In other words it lays down that the grantees and their heirs shall enjoy the benefits accruing from the property for the support and maintenance of themselves and their descendants and shall not be deprived of any part thereof in any way. It makes no provision as to what is to happen to the property if the descent at any time fails. It provides in other words for a succession of life-estates without any ultimate dedication either to the poor or to any other charitable object recognised by the Muhammadan Law.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff appellant argues that the mere use of the word "waqf" in the deed suggests perpetuity, and that the law would presume in such a case that if the descent fails, the poor shall be the ultimate object of the disposition. But on this point there is a wide difference of opinion between the different Jurists. Abu Hanifa and Muhammad declare that the waqf must expressly purport to be in perpetuity, and that if the object of the waqf fails, or is such that it may at any time fail, the waqf must be regarded as void. Abu Yusuf has however laid down that perpetuity will be presumed, if not stated, and that if the object of the waqf fails, it will result in favour of the poor. The views of the different Jurists have been summed up by the author of the Hedaya (Hamilton's Hedaya, Vol. II, page 341), and though it is said, the views of Abu Yusuf have found favour in Balkh and certain other countries (Baillie's Muhammadan Law, Vol. I, page 567), it could be said that the use of the word waqf can be separated from the context so as to convert a personal grant to a specified set of individuals into a public disposition. As a general rule when Muslim Jurists of authority express dissenting opinions upon some question, the Islamic Courts presided over by the Qazi are vested with authority to adopt that view which in the opinion of the Presiding Officer is most in accordance with justice in the particular circumstances. In the case of Muhammad Mumtaz Ahmad v. Zubaida Jan (3) that principle was accepted and applied, and considering that the disposition here in question was really intended to benefit certain specified individuals and their descendants without any reference to the ultimate fate of the property in case the descent failed it is reasonable to presume that it was intended thereby to grant successive life-estates rather than to create a permanent disposition of the property in the sense contended for on behalf of the plaintiff. It is not possible in these circumstances to depart from the view which has been taken in previous cases in which this document came up for consideration. I agree, therefore, in the order proposed.

Part performance, doctrine of, applicability of—Specific performance, agreement not capable of, effect of.

The doctrine of part performance has no applicability in the case of an agreement, specific performance of which cannot be had under law. [p. 843, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree and judgment of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 2nd July 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 72 of 1924.

FACTS.—This was a suit to recover possession of occupancy field No. 75, area 1.99 acres, situated in Mouza Bahndewadi, Tahsil Ramtek. In 1318 Pasli the plaintiff leased out the village to Martand Bapuji Waikar for 19 years and in 1332, Martand Bapuji assigned his lease-hold rights for the unexpired term in favour of the defendant. Plaintiff alleged that she was the keep of Balkrishna Raghav and that the latter had given her the field in dispute along with certain other fields in tenancy; that in 1331, she had leased out the field in suit to one Pandu Gone for one year; that when on the expiry of Pandu's term of lease, she went to take possession of the field in dispute, defendant obstructed her and did not allow her to take possession of the said field.

Defendant admitted that plaintiff was the tenant of the field in suit prior to 1916, but he pleaded that in 1916 in satisfaction of the debt of Rs. 300 which she owed to Martand Bapuji Waikar, the then thekedar of the village, she surrendered the said field along with other fields to Martand Bapuji and delivered possession of the same to him; that when Martand Bapuji assigned his lease-hold rights to the defendant, he transferred possession of the field in suit along with other fields which he acquired by surrender from the plaintiff to the defendant and that the defendant was in possession of all those fields including the field in suit by virtue of the said transfer; that plaintiff had ceased to be a tenant of the field in suit; that her right to recover the same was barred by limitation and that her suit was liable to be dismissed.

Plaintiff, in reply, admitted execution of the deed of surrender in favour of Martand Bapuji, but pleaded that it was nominal and never acted upon. She denied having given possession of the fields covered by the deed of surrender to Martand Bapuji and alleged that she was all along in possession of the said fields. She pleaded that she had been dispossessed by the defendant within two years prior to the date of suit and that her claim was consequently within time.

The Court below without going into the question as to whether the surrender in question was nominal or genuine and whether in pursuance of this surrender possession of the fields covered by it was transferred to Martand Bapuji held that the deed of surrender was inadmissible for want of registration and that consequently the alleged surrender could not be proved. It further held that plaintiff had been dispossessed within two years prior to suit and that consequently her claim was within time. On the strength of these findings, it decreed the claim of the plaintiff against the defendant who has now preferred this appeal.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are sufficiently clear from the judgments of the two lower Courts. The plaintiff-appellant has come up on appeal to this Court against the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, dated the 2nd of July 1924, remanding the case for a fresh trial to the first Court. This remand was largely made on the strength of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar (1) and it is urged on behalf of the appellant that the learned District Judge failed to appreciate the restrictions which existed on the rule of "part performance" of a contract. It has, in the first place, been advanced on behalf of the appellant that here we are concerned with occupancy land which is only transferable under exceptional conditions and that the doctrine of "part performance" is, therefore, not applicable.

I know of no authority for this proposition as it stands. I have, however, been referred to the decisions in Jogendra Krishna Roy v. Kurpal Harshi & Co. (2) and in Sanjib Chandra Sanyal v. Santosh Kumar Lahiri (3). It is suggested that the lower Appellate Court has overlooked the circumstance that in the former quoted case Mookerjee, J., remarked as follows in this connection:—

charjee (5) and Haripada Ghose v. Nirod Krishna Ghose (6) that when in pursuance of an agreement to transfer property, the intended transferee has taken possession, though the requisite legal documents have not been executed and registered, the position is the same as if the documents had been executed, provided that specific performance can be obtained between the parties to the agreement in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined. We, must then take it there was in law as in fact a tenancy for a term of three years and that the defendant Company were not entitled to terminate it by the notice of surrender dated the 27th February 1918."

Here, however, the position is somewhat different. The agreement in question was admittedly executed but, not having been registered, was inadmissible in evidence as such. The latter case quoted is of less help, for therein the plaintiff was suing for specific performance and that suit had necessarily to be dismissed. The principle laid down in Jogendra Krishna Roy v. Kurpal Harshi & Co (2) however, seems to be undoubtedly applicable to the present case and, in the peculiar circumstances thereof, I am of opinion that the doctrine of "part performance" cannot apply and there could obviously have been no question of any possibility of a decree for specific performance being passed in the circumstances of the present case, and this being so the well-known restriction on the rule of "part performance" would appear to apply here. This being so, the remand of the case was, in my opinion, improper.

I may further point out that in paras. 12-14 of the first Court's judgment there were also definite findings as to the plaintiff's possession after the surrender and as to the defendant only having dispossessed her in March 1922, which do not seem to have been specifically considered by the learned District Judge and which, so far as this suit was concerned, made the application of the doctrine of "part performance" quite impossible.

The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are, therefore, reversed and those of the first Court are restored. The respondent-defendant will bear the plaintiff-appellant's costs in all three Courts in addition to his own.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr Justice Mukerji, dated the 24th of March 1924, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No 105 of 1922.

Babu D. L. Kastgir, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—When this appeal was before us previously we sent back the matter to the lower Appellate Court for certain findings to be recorded.

Firstly, whether the defendant was or was not a permanent raiyat with rights of transfer in the land. Secondly, whether the defendant was or was not a settled raiyat of the village in respect of other lands and whether in addition to the homestead there was any other land other than a strip of garden land. Thirdly, as to whether or not any improvements had been effected by the defendant on the land and whether such improvements had been effected with the landlord's assent and the value thereof.

The learned Munsif to whom the case was remitted has now returned it with the following findings. He holds that the plaintiff is an occupancy raiyat without the right of transfer and permanency in his holding. Secondly, that the defendant is a settled raiyat of the village in respect of lands other than the land in question and that he had acquired rights of occupancy therein. He further finds that the defendant's tenancy which is in dispute includes other culturable (nal) lands besides the homestead and a strip of garden. He finds that the area of the culturable land is not less than 2 kanis and that the whole of the land of the defendant's tenancy lies about his homestead and is appurtenant thereto. He also finds that no improvements have been effected by the defendant with the assent of the landlord, express or implied, and he assessed the value of the improvements carried out by the defendant at Rs. 300.

Now, both sides have argued before us that they are entitled to succeed on the findings of the Munsif. The real point which arises on these findings is whether or not the defendant is protected by the provisions of s. 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which provides that "when a raiyyat holds his homestead otherwise than as part of his holding as a raiyyat, the incidents of his tenancy of the homestead shall be regulated by local custom or usage, and, subject to local custom or usage, by the provisions of this Act applicable to land held by a raiyyat." The plaintiff contends that the defendant is not protected by the provisions of s. 182 and that he is an under-raiyyat and that as proper notice has been given under the provisions of s. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the defendant is liable to be ejected from his homestead and so far as the findings are concerned, the plaintiff contends that the finding being that there are in addition to the actual homestead culturable lands section 182 has no application and affords no protection to the defendant. The defendant, on the other hand, contends that on the finding of the Munsif the lands must be taken really to form part of his homestead and to be appurtenant thereto and, consequently, he contends that he is not liable to be evicted by the notice which the plaintiff has given him.

I think that the contention of the defendant is correct and that he is not liable to be evicted from the land. It seems to me that on the findings of the learned Munsif the lands extending 2 kanis which he describes as culturable lands are really part of the homestead itself. As I have already stated, the Munsif says that these lands lie about the homestead and are appurtenant thereto and I think, therefore, that on this finding we should hold that these lands are included in the homestead and are part thereof and that, consequently the defendant is protected from eviction by the provisions of s. 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In the result, the appeal fails and we have arrived at the same conclusion as the learned Judge who tried the case arrived but upon different grounds.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed and the defendant will be entitled to his costs in all Courts including the costs of the remand to the Munsif.

Practice—Evidence—One party calling opposite party as witness—Procedure, whether regular

It is an objectionable practice for one party to call the opposite party as his own witness. There is no objection whatever to an Advocate seeking to prove his case out of the mouth of the opposite party, but if he puts the opposite party into the witness-box, he takes the risk of making statements made by that witness part of his own evidence [p 845, col 1].

Although in a proper case the Court may be satisfied from the witness's demeanour that he is hostile and may in such circumstances even allow the Advocate to cross-examine, it is irregular for a Court to allow one party to call the other as his witness on the ground that it is desirable to elicit some facts from the said witness before the Court hears any other evidence in the suit [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—This is a hopeless appeal and I do not desire to waste my words on it except on one matter. The onus was rightly found by the learned Subordinate Judge to be on the defendants. Accordingly they opened the proceedings and called evidence first. The defendants adopted the objectionable practice of calling the first plaintiff as their witness, objectionable for this reason, that they were obviously bound to follow it up, and it appears clearly from the judgment that they did follow it up, by asking the Judge to disbelieve and set aside all the evidence given by the first plaintiff. This practice has frequently been unfavourably commented upon by this Court and indeed also by the Privy Council. There is no objection whatever to an Advocate seeking to prove his case out of the mouth of the opposite party; but if he puts the opposite party into the box, he takes the risk of making statements made by that witness part of his own evidence. It is possible that in a proper case the Court would be satisfied from the witness's demeanour that he was hostile and might in such circumstances even allow the Advocate to cross-examine him; but that very rarely happens. This course was adopted in this case, apparently because the Vakil said that he wanted to elicit some facts from this witness before he heard any other evidence in the suit. He was evidently suspicious that the witness might improve upon facts in the light of any other evidence that might be adduced if he was not examined first. There is no warrant for any such procedure whatever and I regret that the Subordinate Judge permitted it to be done. But, in my opinion, in this particular case it cannot be allowed to affect the result, because the answers the witness did give were sufficient in the opinion of the learned Judge and sufficient in my opinion to show that the whole of this story about an undivided family property is a concoction from start to finish. That is all I desire to say about this appeal which will be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiffs sued for recovery of possession of an declaration of their title to certain bastu land. Their allegation was that the disputed homestead belonged to one Mati Lal Mallick who died some years ago leaving Monmohini as his widow and heir. Monmohini died in 1912, and then, according to the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs' father Muchiram who was the nearest reversionary heir of Motilal succeeded to the property in suit. The defendants, however, kept the plaintiffs out of possession and hence the suit.

The defence was that the disputed homestead did not belong to Mati Lal and secondly that Muchiram was not the nearest reversionary heir of Matilal, because Jadab Charan, the ancestor of Muchiram, having been adopted by one Baisnab Charan, the plaintiffs' father Muchiram was not the nearest reversioner but the defendants' father was.

The suit was tried in both the Courts on the issue whether Jadab Charan was or was not adopted by Baisnab Charan, apparently both the parties agreeing that if Jadab Charan had been adopted by Baisnab Charan then the plaintiffs' father was not the nearest reversioner.

The first Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit with costs. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that Jadab had been adopted by Baisnab Charan and for that reason Muchiram was not the nearest reversioner.

The plaintiffs had contended that the question as to whether Baisnab Charan had or had not adopted Jadab Charan was barred by the principle or res judicata.

This point the learned Subordinate Judge held against the plaintiffs. He found that Baisnab Charan had adopted Jadab and he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and they contend that the question whether Jadab was or was not adopted by Baisnab Charan is barred by the principle of res judicata. To establish their case of res judicata they rely on the following facts: Monmohini brought a suit on a mortgage and obtained a decree and in execution of this mortgage decree she purchased some of the lands covered by the mortgage and applied for possession. Pending the delivery of possession she died and the present plaintiffs then applied to the Court of the Munsif for possession on the ground that they were the nearest reversioners. Against this application the present defendants, Promatha Nath Mullick, Sadananda Mullick and Mahananda Mullick preferred objection on the ground that they were the nearest reversioners as Jadab had been adopted by Baisnab. Pending the hearing of this objection the Court apparently put the plaintiffs in possession. The Court then proceeded to hear the objection and after hearing the evidence allowed the objection and set aside the order giving possession to the plaintiffs and directed the objectors to be put in possession, under what provisions of the Code the learned Munsif proceeded it is perhaps difficult to see. He was certainly not proceeding under the provisions of s. 47, C. P. C., because this was not a matter relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and the learned Advocate has not been able to point out to us any other section of the Code under which the learned Munsif was acting. On the face of it the learned Munsif's proceeding would seem to be entirely without jurisdiction. Be that as it may the Munsif after hearing the parties revised his own order and determined that the objectors had the better title and ordered them to be put in possession. Against this order the plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the District Judge who held that the Munsif was wrong in his order as he had no power to revise his own order in the circumstances and then holding on the facts that the plaintiffs had better title he set aside the order of the Munsif revising his own order. The learned District Judge's order was affirmed on appeal by this High Court. Now it is quite clear that this order of the Munsif cannot operate as res judicata. In the first place the learned Munsif had no jurisdiction whatever to pass any order in the matter at all. It was not a matter coming under s. 47 as I have pointed out. Neither did it come under any other section of the Code. Secondly the learned District Judge held that the learned Munsif had no power to revise his own order and, therefore, the order that he passed revising his own order in which he dealt with the title of the two parties was ultra vires. What, therefore, was restored was the original order of the Munsif putting the plaintiffs into possession. But this order was apparently passed ex parte without hearing the opposite party. It cannot, therefore, be said that the question as to whether Jadab was or was not adopted by Baisnab Charan was decided in the proceedings of the Munsif putting the plaintiffs into possession. The learned Judge, therefore, is quite right in holding that this order of the Munsif did not operate as res judicata between the parties with respect to the question whether Jadab Charan had or had not been adopted by Baisnab Charan.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Chakravarti, J.—I agree. I wish only to add that the finding now relied upon by Sir Pravas Chandra Mitter as res judicata between the parties was made by the District Judge in a proceeding which he himself held to be without jurisdiction. If that is so any order in a proceeding which was without jurisdiction would be of no effect.

A Court is not justified in setting aside an ex parte order passed in an execution proceeding on an application made more than 30 days after the judgment-debtor became aware of such order against him.

Where a combined mortgage-decree gives relief against the property as well as the person of the mortgagor, the time for execution against the person should be calculated from the date of the decree and not from the date of the mortgagee failing to get relief by sale of the property.

No. 516 of 1921, in O. S. No. 7 of 1903.

Mr. R. Kuppusami Iyer, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of our learned brother, Odgers, J. The first point urged for the appellant is that the order on execution application No. 386 of 1918 operated as res judicata in favour of the appellant and that the District Munsif was wrong in dismissing the execution application which was filed on the 6th August 1921. The District Munsif decided in E. P. No. 386 of 1918 that the application of the appellant was not barred by limitation. The District Munsif who dealt with the present application set aside the ex parte order on No. 386 of 1918 on the ground that the District Munsif who first disposed of the petition had not before him the decision of the Privy Council in Khulna Loan Co., Ltd. v. Jnanendra Nath Bose (1). It is pointed out by Mr. Kuppusami Iyer, and very rightly too, that the District Munsif was not justified in setting aside the ex parte order on E. A. No. 386 of 1918 as the application to set aside the ex parte order was made more than 30 days after the judgment-debtor became aware of the ex parte order against him. Against this order a revision petition was filed by the appellant and Odgers, J., has dismissed the revision petition. The order on E. P. No. 386 of 1918 passed by the former District Munsif has ceased to be in force. Therefore, there is no order now upon which the appellant can rely for his contention that the plea of limitation is barred by reason of the order on No. 386 of 1918. Therefore, we disallow this contention.

The next contention of Mr. Kuppusami Iyer is that the application is not barred by reason of s. 48 of the C. P. C. The decree in this case is a combined decree both against the property and person of the mortgagor under the old Code and it has been distinctly held by the Privy Council in Khulna Loan Co., Ltd. v. Jnanendra Nath Bose (1) that a decree against the person becomes unexecutable after the lapse of 12 years from the date of the decree, in other words, where a combined decree gives relief against the property as well as the person of the mortgagor, the time for execution against the person should be calculated from the date of the decree and not from the date of the mortgagee failing to get relief by sale of the properties. In this case, the properties were sold on the 26th July 1911 and the mortgagee obtained only part satisfaction of the decree. But in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khulna Loan Co., Ltd. v. Jnanendra Nath Bose (1) we are unable to accept the contention of Mr. Kuppusami Iyer that the application for the execution of the decree against the person of the mortgagor should be considered to be in time, for the reason that he could not have executed the decree before the sale of the property was found insufficient to satisfy his decree. If an order was passed after the property had been sold, that for the balance, other properties of the mortgagor's should be proceeded against, the present application would be in time, but no such order was passed and, therefore, the application is barred by s. 48 of the C. P. C.

The appeal fails and is dismissed. We make no order as to costs, as the respondent did not appear.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bellary, in A. S. No. 18 of 1922, (A. S. No. 25 of 1922), on the file of the District Court, Bellary, preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Bellary, in O. S. No. 234 of 1920.

Mr. C. V. Ananta Krishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In O. S. No. 208 of 1916 in the District Munsif's Court, Bellary, the plaintiff sued for a declaration that the mortgage by a widow named Subbalakshmi and a sale of a house were invalid beyond her life time, he being the reversioner to the estate. The mortgagee purchaser and the decree-holder in a money suit filed against the widow were made parties. The matter was referred to arbitration by order of Court on the consent of the parties. The arbitrators went beyond the scope of the reference and declared the plaintiff to be entitled to obtain immediate possession of the house during the widow's lifetime on payment of Rs. 900 which was not a matter referred to their decision through Court. The Court that tried the suit, therefore, rightly refused to embody that part of the award in its decree. In the present suit the same plaintiff has sued for possession of the house alleging that he has tendered Rs. 900 within the period provided in the award which was one year from the date of the award. The suit was dismissed with costs, the District Munsif holding that there was no consent on the part of the defendant that the arbitrators should settle the question of immediate delivery of the house. Upon appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that although the question of immediate possession was not a matter referred to the arbitrators through Court yet the allegation in the plaint that the arbitrators were privately asked to decide this question and that the parties agreed to abide by their decision was true. He disagreed with the finding of the District Munsif who believed the evidence given by the defendant and he found as a fact that the defendant accepted the terms of the entire award not only in respect of the matters referred through Court but also in respect of the matters which the parties themselves invited the arbitrators to decide. This is a finding of fact by the Appellate Court which had jurisdiction to decide it and I must accept the finding.

The learned Subordinate Judge on the question of law held that this part of the award could be enforced as an agreement between the parties. I think he was right. The decision in Muhammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Farhat Ali Khan (1) dealt only with an ultra vires award upon a matter which was not referred to arbitration either through Court or otherwise and Rampratap Chamria v. Durgaprasad Chamria (2) may be distinguished on the same ground. These cases do not decide that if there is a private agreement to refer to arbitration and the arbitrators pronounce an award that award cannot be enforced in a subsequent suit.

The only other point is whether the plaintiff made a tender of Rs. 900 within one year of the date fixed in the award. It was found that he gave a notice through his Vakil offering the money unconditionally before the due date and he applied for a challan for remitting Rs. 900 to the treasury on the 10th April 1918 which was the last day for the tender. The Subordinate Judge was, therefore, right in holding that the plaintiff had complied with the condition under which it was agreed in adjustment of the parties' disputes that the plaintiff should pay Rs. 900 and get possession of the property. The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The amount deposited in Court may be paid to the respondent's Vakil in adjustment of the respondent's costs.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 141, 143—Unlawful assembly, what is—Common object—Meeting for deliberation

An assembly cannot be an unlawful assembly within the meaning of s 141 of the Penal Code unless the common object of the persons composing the assembly falls within one of the five classes described in that section [p 849, col 2]

For the purposes of s 141 of the Penal Code the "common object" must denote a common object then and there as an assembly to take action, and it cannot be held that there was such a common object because the members of the assembly agreed at some uncertain future date to take individual action [ibid]

Where the members of an assembly merely agree as to what they should individually do, when, in the case of each person separately, a demand is made for the payment of a certain tax, the assembly does not come within the definition of an unlawful assembly as laid down in s 141 of the Penal Code [p 850, col 1]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Thayetmyo, in Cr. Reg No 131 of 1924.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. Maung Ni, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, Nga Tun Maung, was convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Thayetmyo, under the provisions of s. 143 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to suffer six months' rigorous imprisonment. On appeal, this conviction was set aside by the Sessions Judge and the respondent was acquitted. The Local Government has now preferred an appeal against this order of acquittal.

The facts as found by the learned Sessions Judge are as follows.—

The respondent is or was the president of a national association in Thayetmyo. On the 29th of September a largely attended meeting was held at Bangon in one of the Pongyi-Kyaungs. At that time there was a wide-spread feeling throughout the country against the payment of capitation tax. The accused made a speech at the meeting in which he suggested that the imposition of capitation tax was peculiar to Burma and illegal. He advised the people to plead poverty and thus evade payment of the tax when demand is made. The proposals were put to the meeting and were accepted by all those present. These facts are not admitted by the respondent who gives quite a different version of what took place at the meeting. It is not, however, necessary for me to go into the facts of this case. It is not alleged on behalf of the Crown that the facts can be put more strongly in favour of the prosecution than found by the Sessions Judge, and, in my opinion, the Sessions Judge was perfectly right in holding that on those facts the offence of which the respondent was convicted by the Magistrate had not been established.

Section 143 provides punishment for any person who is a member of an unlawful assembly. An unlawful assembly is defined in s 141 of the Code. An assembly cannot be an unlawful assembly unless the common object of the persons composing the assembly falls within one of the five classes described in that section. The contention in the present case is that the case falls within the second class and that the common object of the persons composing the assembly was to resist the execution of any law or of any legal process. Section 141 is the first section in Ch. VIII which is headed "Offence against the Public Tranquillity." It appears to have been founded on the general principles of the English Common Law to protect the public peace from dangers to it caused by the combination of the forces of a number of persons. In the present case there was no suggestion whatever that the assembly should make use of its members and jointly resist any law or legal process. The members of the assembly merely agreed as to what they should individually do, when, in the case of each person, separately, a demand was made for the payment of capitation tax. Even assuming that mere refusal to pay a tax would amount to resistance of the execution of a law I find myself unable to hold that the mere agreement entered into as to what they should individually do on a subsequent occasion amounts to their having a common object to resist. There was never any intention of resisting as a body either then or at any future time. If s. 141 be read as a whole and with due regard to the position it occupies in the Code it seems to me that "common object" must denote a common object then and there as an assembly to take action, and that it cannot be held that there was such a common object because the members of the assembly agreed at some uncertain future date to take individual action. It would be an undue extension of the meaning of the word "object" to say that the object of meeting or of any of the persons composing the meeting was to resist the law. The object of the meeting was to discuss and agree as to what the members of the meetings should do individually on subsequent occasions.

The learned Assistant Government Advocate admits that he is unable to cite any case in which an assembly has been held to be an unlawful assembly where there has been no intention there and then as an assembly to carry out the unlawful object. I have been unable to find any direct judicial authority on the point. In Gour's Commentary on the Indian Penal Code (page 566) the following passage occurs: "But it must be a part of the plan of the meeting that the common object should be forthwith carried into effect, for, if men meet only to arrange plans for future action it cannot be said that there was any fear of the breach of the peace without which there can be no unlawful assembly." This passage appears to be founded on some English authority which I have been unable to procure. But it appears to me to be in accordance with the natural meaning of s. 141 of the Indian Penal Code.

In Ratanlal's Law of Crimes the learned commentators appear to be of the same opinion for they state in their notes on s. 141: "It seems also that there must be some present and immediate purpose of carrying into effect the common object and that a meeting for deliberation only, and to arrange plans for future action is not an unlawful assembly."

It has been contended that to constitute an unlawful assembly it is not necessary that violence should actually be used. This contention is no doubt correct. But to constitute an offence under s. 143 the common object as defined in s. 141 must be proved to exist. In my opinion the view of the law taken by the learned Sessions Judge was perfectly correct and the appellant was rightly acquitted of the offence of being a member of an unlawful assembly. I dismiss this appeal.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 35, Illustration—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 366, 376—Abduction with intent to commit rape—Commission of rape—Sentence.

If a person abducts a woman with intent to rape her and does rape her, he cannot be awarded separate sentences under ss. 366 and 376, Penal Code. [p. 851, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Magistrate First Class, exercising enhanced powers under s. 30 of the Cr. P. C., Jhelum, dated the 28th July 1924.

Mr. Dhan Raj Shah, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. H. Carden Noad, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Imam Ali aged about 20 has been convicted under ss. 366, 376 and 326 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment for each offence, the sentences to run consecutively. The story of his victim Musammatt Bassan, who was a spinster 16 years of age, was briefly as follows:—

She was coming with other girls of her village with a pitcher full of water on her head. As she approached the door of the accused the latter who was already standing there came out and caught hold of her. He threw down her pitcher from her head, and dragged her away into a room inside his house. There he asked her to elope with him which she refused to do. He then raped her and after that again asked her to run away with him. She refused again. He then cut off her nose and upper lip with a knife. The learned Counsel who has appeared for the appellant expresses his inability to urge that it was not the accused who cut off the girl's nose and lip or that the girl's main story is unworthy of credit. According to the evidence of a lady doctor, her hymen had been recently ruptured and so there can be no manner of doubt that the accused dragged her away into the house and there raped her and then cut off her nose and upper lip.

The girl had once been engaged to him but the engagement had been broken off, and the accused had married another girl. Later on his wife died and he wanted to marry the complainant but her parents did not agree. This was the motive for the most dastardly act done by him.

His Counsel, however, urges that separate sentences under ss. 366 and 376 could not be awarded and in support of this contention he cites the unpublished Division Bench judgment of the Punjab Chief Court in Criminal Appeal No. 101 of 1914, dated the 13th August 1914. In that case the learned Judges held by a reference to the Illustration to s. 35 of the Cr. P. C., that if a person abducts a woman with intent to rape her and does rape her he cannot be awarded separate sentences under ss. 366 and 376 of the Indian Penal Code. In view of that ruling I set aside the sentence under s. 363 and maintain the sentences under ss. 376 and 326, Indian Penal Code.

Mr. Noad on behalf of the Crown states that the punishment thus reduced is inadequate and that he will in due course file an application for enhancement of sentences. This will be considered when he will make the application. At present the result is that the appeal is accepted to the extent stated above.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 141 OF 1925.

Present:—Mr. Findlay, Officiating J. C.
LOCAL GOVERNMENT—APPLICANT

DOMA KUNBI—ACCUSED—NON-APPLICANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 435 to 439—Revision—Judicial Commissioner's Court, power of—Interference with conviction by Single Judge—Conviction, alteration in, by Judge—Enhancement of sentence at instance of Government—Procedure.

It is not open to the Judicial Commissioner's Court under s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. to alter or interfere with a conviction which has been arrived at by a Judge of the Court, as ss. 435 to 439 of the Code clearly contemplate interference only with the findings, sentences or orders of any inferior Court. [p. 852, col. 1.]

Where, however, a Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court hearing an appeal against a conviction, alters the conviction to one for a graver offence, but does not himself enhance the sentence, but suggests an action in that behalf by the Local Government, his judgment is not final from that point of view and the Judicial Commissioner's Court does not become a functus officio and is competent to hear application on behalf of the Local Government for enhancement of the sentence. [ibid.]

If a finding of a Sessions Judge for culpable homicide has been altered by the Appellate Court to one for murder, it is open to the Judicial Commissioner's Court sitting as a Court of Revision to pass a legal sentence for the offence of murder. [p. 852, col. 2.]

The proper construction to be put on s. 439 (4), Cr. P. C., is that it refers to cases where there has been a complete acquittal and not to cases where there has been only an alteration of findings by the Appellate Court, the conviction by the Sessions Court being kept in tact. [ibid.]

Kambam Balu Reddy v. Emperor, 22 Ind. Cas. 756, 37 M. 119, 15 Cr. L. J. 180, followed.

It is open to a Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, who hears an appeal against a conviction and who comes to the conclusion that a graver offence has been committed, not only to alter the conviction but to proceed on the revisional side to issue notice to the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, and, if no sufficient cause is shown, to enhance the sentence accordingly. [p. 854, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the judgment of the Sessions Judge, Nagpur, dated the 24th February 1925, in Sessions Trial No. 19 of 1924.

Mr. G. P. Dick (Government Advocate), for the Applicant.

Mr. V. Bose, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The present application has been filed by the Local Government under somewhat exceptional circumstances. The non-applicant Doma Kunbi, after being charged with the offence of the murder of one Jago Kunbi, was convicted by the Sessions Judge, Nagpur of the minor offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under s. 304 of the Indian Penal Code, being acquitted of the charge of murder, and was sentenced to 5 years' rigorous imprisonment. He appealed against the said sentence to this Court, the appeal being heard by Hallifax, A. J. C., who came to the conclusion that the offence committed by Doma was one of murder and altered the conviction accordingly. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner held that he could not interfere with the sentence passed but added that the case would be brought to the notice of the Local Government. Presumably, as a result of this the Local Government have now applied in revision to the effect that an appropriate and legal sentence in the case of a conviction for murder should be passed by this Court, and we have now heard the present application.

The learned Counsel for the non-applicant has strenuously urged that it was open to us, sitting as a Bench, to go into the merits of the conviction for murder and, if necessary to alter that conviction. He has pointed out that otherwise he finds himself in an anomalous position as all that it would be open to him to urge before us would be that the non-applicant should be sentenced to the lesser of the two punishments provided for the offence of murder. We fully realise that the position is anomalous and exceptional but we are nevertheless of opinion that, sitting as a Court of Revision, it is not open to us under s. 439, Cr. P. C., to alter or interfere with a conviction which has been arrived at by a Judge of this Court. Sections 435 to 439 clearly contemplate interference only with the findings, sentences or orders of any inferior Court. This fact alone makes it absolutely clear, in our opinion, that we cannot, even if we should see reason to, interfere with the conviction for murder arrived at by Hallifax, A. J. C.

It has been urged on behalf of the non-applicant that the action of this Bench in taking cognizance of the case was ultra vires and that this Court had become functus officio as soon as Hallifax, A. J. C., had delivered his judgment in Criminal Appeal No 72 of 1925. It was admitted by Counsel for the non-applicant that it might have been open to Hallifax, A. J. C. even to enhance the sentence, but it is urged that, he not having done so, we are precluded from now interfering. Reliance has been placed on s. 369, Cr. P. C., in this connection, but we cannot agree that the judgment of Hallifax, A. J. C., can from this point of view, be regarded as a final one. The later part of that judgment clearly contemplates further action by this Court in case the Local Government decided to move in the matter, and the present proceedings must be, in our opinion, regarded as a completion of, or necessary addendum to the judgment delivered by Hallifax, A. J. C.

We do not think it necessary to enter into the abstract argument offered by Counsel for the non-applicant to the effect that, theoretically at least the present non-applicant as a result of our taking into consideration the application of the Local Government, is placed in peril of his life, and that in every such case the rules of this Court require that the appeal should be heard by a Bench. We are satisfied—and we informed Counsel for the non-applicant in the course of argument of this that the circumstances of this case would not, in any event, call in our opinion, for the infliction of the death penalty, and from the practical point of view, therefore this line of argument becomes one which it is needless to consider in the circumstances of the present case.

The next argument offered on behalf of the non-applicant is that as he had already been acquitted of the charge of murder and as there has been no appeal by the Local Government against that acquittal, we are precluded from taking cognizance of the present case. Reference has been made to the fact that under s. 423 (b) (2) this Court may have been entitled to alter the finding to one of murder, but it is expressly prohibited from enhancing the sentence. We are, however, now sitting as a Court of Revision, and the finding having been legitimately altered by Hallifax, A. J. C., sitting as a Court of Appeal, to one of murder, we are of opinion that it is within our power, sitting as a Court of Revision, to pass a sentence which will be a legal one in view of the conviction for murder. In Kumbam Bali Reddy v Emperor (1) Benson and Ayyar, J.J., held as regards s. 439, sub-s. (4), that the proper construction to be put thereon is that it only refers to cases where there has been a complete acquittal. In this case there was no complete acquittal before the Sessions Judge. All that the latter Court did, was to record a finding of culpable homicide not amounting to murder instead of one of murder itself. We concur with the two learned Judges mentioned that this is the proper construction to be put on s. 439, sub-s. (4), Cr. P. C.

In the present case, therefore, all that is required of us to do is to pass a legal sentence in view of the conviction for murder recorded by Hallifax, A. J. C. We accordingly enhance the sentence of 5 years' rigorous imprisonment passed by the Sessions Judge, Nagpur, to one of transportation for life.

In view, however, of the peculiar circumstances of this case, we have judged it well to make an independent examination of the record and to record whether or not, in our opinion, the non-applicant is guilty of murder. In the written argument (part of which challenges the merits of the conviction) which we have allowed Counsel for the non-applicant to file, various considerations have been advanced attacking the conviction for murder on the merits.

(1) 22 Ind. Cas. 756; 37 M. 119; 15 Cr. L. J. 180.

Reference has been made to the fact that some prosecution witnesses, at least, have from time to time changed or improved upon their original stories. Again, stress has been laid on the fact that the weapon, with which Jago was stabbed, has been described in various ways from time to time, at one time as a tutari, for example, while at another as a gupti. We do not think that this matter is of any vital importance. The weapon in question has been fully described by Hallifax, A. J. C., and it was certainly of a hybrid nature, misdescription of which was also bound to occur. Apparently, there was a shemb or so-called ferrule on the weapon, which Vithal removed before he handed it to Doma of the evidence of Laxman (P. W. No. 1). That the weapon used had a sharp pointed end is clearly shown by Hallifax, A. J. C., and Doma must have been well aware of this. The evidence of Laxman (P. W. No. 1), Bajirao (P. W. No. 9), Sakharam (P. W. No. 10), Raja (P. W. No. 11) and Jago (P. W. No. 12) leaves, in our opinion, no doubt that Doma did stab Jago with this weapon, as found by Hallifax, A. J. C. We do not think much importance can be attached to the fact that C. V. Sahasrabudhe, Assistant Medical Officer, (P. W. No. 10 in the Committing Magistrate's Court), had originally described the wound as a lacerated one, if he did so, the mistake was, in all probability, a careless one. In view of certain aspects of the medical evidence it has, indeed, been suggested on behalf of the non-applicant that the rupture in the lung may have been caused subsequently by a further insertion of the same or another weapon by some person other than the non-applicant. This theory seems to us too far fetched a one to require detailed discussion. We are satisfied, in particular on the evidence of Lt. Col. Tarr, Civil Surgeon, (P. W. No. 5 in the Committing Magistrate's Court), that curious and exceptional though this case may be from the medical point of view, Jago's death occurred as a direct result of the stab inflicted by the non-applicant.

Much has been made of the fact that in the deceased's written report made to the Police (Ex. P-1) and in the earlier reports of the affair generally the tendency was to describe Jago as only having received an ordinary beating with sticks and the like. Very obviously, however, the eye-witnesses did not realise, nor is this to be wondered at, that the real and vital injury had been caused by the one thrust given with the so-called tutari.

Again, mention has been made of the fact that the Civil Surgeon considers that the deceased's arm must have been at right angles to his body before the piece of iron found therein could have entered Jago's person in the way it did, and it has been suggested that the evidence goes to show that the deceased was held down when the stab-wound was inflicted. In the course of a struggle of this nature, the deceased's arm would, at some stage or other, in all probability, be at an angle to his body, which would permit of the thrust in question having been given, and we see nothing in this suggestion in the non-applicant's favour.

The theory of accident is also, in our opinion, an untenable one. The deliberate removal of the ferrule, before the weapon was handed over to Doma, and his deliberate use of it immediately thereafter sufficiently dispose of this suggestion. Even, on the merits, therefore, we are satisfied that the conviction in the present case was bound to be one for murder.

At the same time, in case the Local Government should see cause to show any clemency to the non-applicant by way of substitution of a period of rigorous imprisonment in place of the sentence of transportation, which we have felt bound to pass, we desire to record our opinion that the circumstances of this case would seem to call for some clemency being shown to the non-applicant. We think that the said circumstances, in all probability, bring the case under the third clause of s. 300, Indian Penal Code, viz., that the non-applicant stabbed Jago with the intention of causing bodily injury to him and that this bodily injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. We do not think that the non-applicant can even be credited with the constructive knowledge that he knew the bodily injury he intended to inflict was likely to cause death. In other words, the case does not come under the second clause of s. 300, Indian Penal Code. The offence was committed in the course of a sudden brawl, in which the main parties concerned were highly excited and had lost control of themselves as a consequence of the dispute over the field concerned. Still further, although considerable violence must have been used in inflicting the blow, the question remains whether the non-application fully realised what the result of his action might have been, although he must, nevertheless, be credited with the constructive intention, already referred to and specified in the third clause of s. 300, Indian Penal Code. In all the circumstances of the case, therefore, we desire to record our opinion that the interests of justice would be met by a sentence of rigorous imprisonment of from 7 to 10 years.

We desire to add that, in our opinion, it is open to a Judge of this Court, who hears an appeal against a conviction and who comes to the conclusion that a grave offence has been committed, not only to alter the conviction but then to proceed on the revisional side to issue notice to the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced and, if no sufficient cause is shown, to enhance the sentence accordingly. We find support for our view in the recent case of Mangal Naran v. Emperor (2) decided by Macleod, C. J., and Crump, J.

For the purposes of the Burma Village Act a pwe ordinarily includes a theatrical or dramatic performance held for public entertainment whether on public or private property.

The object of requiring a permit for such a performance is to ensure that the authorities should get timely notice to arrange for precautionary measures.

Accused gave a dramatic performance at his house for public entertainment without obtaining a permit for the same. The troupe was composed of local amateurs. During the performance a robbery took place in the neighbourhood:

Held, that the accused was guilty of an offence under s. 21 (a) of the Burma Village Act.

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Magistrate, Allanmyo, in Criminal Regular Trial No. 27 of 1925.

JUDGMENT.—Maung Than Gyaung of Myitnabole village in the Allanmyo Township held a shinbyu ahlu at his house. The local amateurs designated as ayat-zat performed without payment in his compound on the night of 13th February last. Unfortunately a robbery took place during the performance a short distance away. Maung Than Gyaung had taken no previous permit for the show. Consequently he was run in under s. 21 (a), Burma Village Act, and fined Rs. 5.

The learned District Magistrate of Thayetmyo doubted whether any permit was required for such amateur performances by villagers and submitted the case with a recommendation that the conviction and sentence be set aside.

For the purposes of the Act pwe ordinarily includes a theatrical or dramatic performance held for public entertainment whether on public or private property.

The gist of the above definition is "the holding for public entertainment." The object of requiring a permit is to ensure that the authorities get timely notice to arrange for precautionary measures. In the present case the performance was for public entertainment at an ahlu, and as the authorities had not been given any notice, a robbery took place. Moreover, though the troupe was composed of local amateurs, there is evidence to the effect that this zat used to perform in other villages on hire ranging from Rs. 40 to Rs. 60. This offence was committed in the Allanmyo Township where the Local Government have deemed fit to declare even payapwes and pongyibyans to be pwes for the purposes of the Act (see General Department Notification at page 43 of the Village Manual).

I am of opinion that this ayat-zat comes within the purview of s. 21 of the Village Act. Let the case be returned accordingly.

Catching fish in a poromboke tank in the assertion of a bona fide right does not amount to the offence of theft

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of Session of the West Tanjore Division, at Tanjore, dated the 20th December 1923, in Cri. R. P. No. 21 of 1923 (C. C. No. 85 of 1923, on the file of the Court of the Second Class, Magistrate, Tiruvadi) and to direct stay of further proceedings in pursuance of the said order of the Court of Session of the West Tanjore Division, pending final orders on this petition.

Messrs. V L Ethiraj and K. P. Raman Menon, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Nugent Grant and K. V. Srinivasa Iyer, for the Respondent.

The Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown.

ORDER.—The order of the Sessions Judge directing a re-trial of the accused in this case for the offence with regard to which they were discharged by the Magistrate is wrong. There was really no evidence on the record with regard to the ownership of the tank. It appears from the evidence of the karnam that it was poromboke and it was a poromboke tank. So long as the villagers agree, it is well-known that the temple authorities or the headman of the village lease out the yield from such common resources and utilise the same for common purposes. The mere fact, therefore, that the fishery in this tank was leased out in previous years by the temple trustee would not in view of the nature of the common practice go to establish the ownership in the tank. Unless the ownership in the tank is established, there is no question of possession of the fish and there is a fortiori no question of any theft of any fish. After all, I am not at all satisfied that the accused in this case did what they did dishonestly and that they did not catch the fish asserting a bona fide right thereto. I think the criticism of the Sessions Judge that the word bona fide did not appear in the judgment of the Magistrate is somewhat meticulous. There is no doubt whatever as to what the Magistrate really meant to do. The order of the Sessions Judge is, therefore, set aside.

A judgment of an Appellate Court other than a High Court, must comply with the provisions of s 367 of the Cr P C, that is to say, it must contain the point or points for determination and the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision

Ram Lal Singh v Hari Charan Ahir, 5 Ind Cas. 999, 37 C 191, 11 C L J 410, 11 Cr L J 343, relied upon Application to revise an order of the District Magistrate, Sukkur, dated the 3rd August 1925.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, for the Applicants

Mr. T. G. Elphinstone, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this revisional application are very simple and are shortly as follows:—

The complainant had one house which we may, for the purpose of convenience, call house A and he sued the applicant to obtain possession of a second house, which for the sake of convenience, may be called house B. He got a decree for house B and thus obtained possessions of both houses. On a subsequent date the witness Jethanand went to the complainant and told him that he had observed the applicants breaking into the house A. It was 6 o'clock in the morning and the complainant with Jethanand went back to the house A and found the present applicant No. 1 standing at the door of the house with a stick in his hand and the applicant No. 2 inside. They would not allow the complainant to enter the house with the result that he went to the Third Class Magistrate of Sukkur (Mr. Gorwalla) who convicted both the applicants under s. 448 of the Indian Penal Code. He sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 50 each or in default to suffer 15 days' rigorous imprisonment. Rs. 30 out of the total amount were to be awarded as compensation to the complainant. Against this finding and sentence the applicants appealed to the learned District Magistrate of Sukkur who confirmed the conviction and dismissed the appeal.

Against this order of the learned District Magistrate a revision application has been made to this Court.

The learned District Magistrate has given us the story put forward by the applicants, namely, that the complainant had given them the key of the house A and that it was with his permission that they opened the lock of the door and entered it. The learned District Magistrate, however, has observed that even believing the defence story he cannot but hold that their action amounted to a criminal trespass. We find it very difficult to follow the reasoning of the learned District Magistrate. If the complainant really did give the key of house A to the applicants and they entered it with his permission, it was then impossible that they did so with intention to commit an offence or to intimidate or annoy the complainant. Unfortunately, we have no findings of fact in the learned District Magistrate's judgment and so we are unable to say that we will accept the lower Appellate Court's view of the facts, as has long been the practice of High Courts to do. In these circumstances we see no alternative but to return this case to the learned District Magistrate and to direct him to re-hear the appeal and to write a legal judgment in it. In this connection we would specially draw his attention to s. 367 and s. 424 of the Cr. P. C. Section 367 lays down that every judgment shall contain the point or points for determination and the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision. Section 424 applies the direction contained in this section to the judgment of any Appellate Court other than the High Court. We would specially draw the learned District Magistrate's attention to the case of Ram Lal

Singh v. Hari Charan Ahir (1), wherein Jenkins, C. J. made the following observations :—

"It is continually overlooked by Courts of Appeal that s. 424 of the Cr. P. C. prescribes that the rules contained in Chap. XXVI, as to the judgment of a Criminal Court of Original Jurisdiction shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to the judgment of any Appellate Court other than a High Court; and one of the sections in Ch. XXVI, is s. 367, which prescribes that a judgment shall, among other things, contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon, and the reasons for the decision."

The learned District Magistrate will no doubt bear these remarks carefully in mind when he re-writes the judgment in this case after re-hearing the Pleaders engaged in it.

The case is sent back for re-hearing and re-trial.

MISCELLANEOUS APPLICATION NO. 656

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer of case—District Magistrate witness for prosecution—Examination of complainant at his house.

The fact that the District Magistrate is cited as a witness for the prosecution in a trial before another Magistrate in the District is no ground for supposing that the accused will be prejudiced in his trial, so as to justify a transfer of the case.

The fact that a Magistrate trying a case proposes to conduct that portion of the proceedings in which the complainant, who is a very old man and for many years has not left the precincts of his residence, is a witness, at the latter's residence, giving the accused every opportunity of being represented and conducting his case there, does not call for a transfer of the case, as the circumstance would in no way prejudice the trial.

Application under s. 526, Cr. P. C., for transferring the case from the Court of the District Magistrate, First Class, Fyzabad, to some other District.

Dr. J. Misra, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. N. Ghoshal, R. B., for the Crown.

Messrs. Niamatullah and Mohd. Ismail, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for transfer. The facts are these: The applicant is a chela of a Mahant residing in Hanuman Garhi, Ajudhia. The complainant is a Mahant unconnected with the applicant who also resides in the Hanuman Garhi, Ajudhia. The complainant has instituted criminal proceedings against the applicant on a charge of defamation under s. 500, Indian Penal Code. The case is at present in the Court of Mirza Mohammad Hasan, Magistrate of the First Class in Fyzabad. This application prays, firstly, that the case should be transferred not only from the Court of Mirza Mohammad Hasan, but from the Fyzabad District and secondly, that if the case is not so transferred the Magistrate should be ordered to examine the complainant in the Court house at Fyzabad and not at the complainant's residence in Ajudhia. The applicant has had the advantage of having his application argued by a competent Counsel who, I understand, has been briefed specially for the argument, and in these circumstances it is not likely that anything which could be put forward in favour of the applicant has been omitted. The first thing that stands out clearly is that there is nothing made out which can in any way impugn the impartiality or the competence of Mirza Mohammad Hasan. It is suggested that as the District Magistrate of Fyzabad may be cited as a witness in the case the applicant will be prejudiced by having the case heard in the Fyzabad District. If the result of calling the District Magistrate as a witness in Fyzabad were to prejudice the applicant's trial it would follow as a necessary consequence that the Trying Magistrate was not fit to be trusted and as I have every reason to suppose that the Trying Magistrate is competent, I attach no weight to this suggestion. The second point is that the Trying Magistrate proposes to conduct that portion of proceedings in which the complainant is a witness at Hanuman Garhi. It is not suggested that he is not giving the applicant every opportunity of being represented and conducting his case at Hanuman Garhi. The applicant resents this action on the part of the Trying Magistrate on the ground that he is thereby showing special favour to the complainant. In the explanation submitted to me by the District Magistrate,

I find that the reason why the Trying Magistrate proposes to take this course is because the complainant is a very old man who for many years has never left the precincts of the Garhi. I regard the Magistrate's action in this particular as showing nothing more than consideration for a man whom he believes to be old and infirm, and the circumstances in no way prejudice the applicant's trial. I dismiss this application for transfer and direct Mirza Mohammad Hasan to continue proceedings. The applicant Ishwar Das will pay the costs of Mahant Har Narain Das in the matter of this application.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 197 (1) —U P Excise Act (IV of 1910), s. 10 (2) (f) —Excise Inspector, whether removable from office by Excise Commissioner —Sanction for prosecution, whether necessary

An Excise Inspector in the U P is removable from his office by the Excise Commissioner and the sanction of the Local Government is not, therefore, necessary under s. 197 (1), Cr P C, for the prosecution of such Inspector [p 860, col 1]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Moradabad, dated the 6th July 1925.

Mr R F Bahadurji (with him Messrs. Nihal Chand and Kedar Nath), for the Applicant

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Jalaluddin Excise Inspector of the Bijnor District applied to the High Court in revision to have his conviction under s. 161, Indian Penal Code, for taking an illegal gratification from a liquor contractor set aside. The learned Judge to whom the application was presented referred the matter to a Bench of two Judges and also issued a notice to Jalaluddin to show cause why the sentence passed on him should not be enhanced. The applicant was sentenced by a Magistrate of the Moradabad District, to whose Court the case was transferred from Bijnor, to simple imprisonment for one month and a fine of Rs. 500 with three month's further simple imprisonment in default.

The point raised in revision was that the prosecution of the applicant without the sanction of the Local Government was bad and so the trial should be set aside. The applicant is an Excise Inspector who was appointed to his post by the Local Government in 1909. Under s 197 (1) of the Cr. P. C. the sanction of the Local Government is necessary for the prosecution of any public servant who is not removeable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Local Government or some higher authority. The appellant was appointed prior to the passing of the U. P. Excise Act IV of 1910. Under s 10 (2) of that Act the Local Government is given power by a notification to appoint an officer referred to as the Excise Commissioner vide cl. (a) and to delegate to the officer all or any of its powers under the Act except the power conferred by s. 40 of the Act to make rules. In pursuance of such authority the Local Government issued a notification under s 10 (2) (f) of the U. P. Excise Act on 8th September 1924. It is admitted that an Excise Commissioner has been duly appointed. Under the Notification No 295-XIII-110 of 8th September 1924 (U. P. Gazette of 13th September 1924, page 1249) the Local Government has delegated to the Excise Commissioner among other the following powers:

'9. Power to appoint all officers of the Excise Department below the rank of Assistant Excise Commissioner, provided that the appointment and promotion, removal or dismissal of Excise Inspectors shall be subject to the general control of the Local Government.

"10. Power to censure, withhold promotion from, reduce to a lower post, suspend, remove or dismiss all officers of the Excise Department below the rank of Assistant Excise Commissioner."

There is a proviso added to the powers that in cases of dismissal, removal or reduction the Excise Commissioner shall follow the procedure laid down in r. 14 of the rules made by the Secretary of State under s. 96-B (2) of the Government of India Act. According to this notification the applicant who is an Excise Officer below the rank of Assistant Excise Commissioner may be dismissed by the Excise Commissioner. He is, therefore, removeable from his office by an authority lower than that of the Local Government and without the sanction of that Government.

The arguments advanced by the applicant's learned Counsel were directed to the following points:

(1) That the applicant having been appointed prior to the date of the notification he could not be dismissed by the Excise Commissioner.

(2) That the notification in so far as it gave power to the Excise Commissioner to dismiss the applicant, was ultra vires to that extent.

(3) That the authority of the Excise Commissioner was delegated authority and even when he dismissed an Excise Officer it must be taken as if the dismissal was really made by the Local Government through the agency of the Excise Commissioner.

The authority No. 10 of the notification quoted by us above makes it clear that the Excise Commissioner has been given power of dismissal of Excise Officers below the rank of Assistant Excise Commissioner appointed even prior to the date of the notification. In our opinion the applicant could be dismissed by the Excise Commissioner.

By reference to various other notifications it shall be shown that the notification to the extent of the authority No. 10 was not ultra vires. Reference was made to the Government of India Act, s. 96-B (1) wherein it is enacted "subject to the provisions of this Act and of rules made thereunder every person in the civil service of the Crown in India holds office during His Majesty's pleasure ..... but no person in that service may be dismissed by any authority subordinate to that by which he was appointed...." It was argued that the applicant having been appointed by the authority of the Local Government may not be dismissed by any authority subordinate to the Local Government and if any rule is made by the Local Government to that effect it would be contrary to the provisions of s. 96-B (1). The clause, however, begins with the words "Subject to the provisions of this Act and of rules made thereunder." Clause (2) of the same section enacts that "The Secretary of State in Council may make rules for regulating the classification of the civil services in India, the methods of their recruitment, their conditions of service, pay and allowances and discipline and conduct. Such Rules may, to such extent and in respect of such matters as may be prescribed, delegate the power of making Rules to the Governor-General in Council or to Local Governments, or authorise the Indian Legislature or Local Legislatures to make laws regulating the public services."

Obviously the notification of the Local Government referred to above was made under the Rules referred to in cl. (2). The argument that such rules can be framed with respect to officers to be appointed in future cannot hold when we consider the provision to s 96-B (2) which safeguards the existing or recurring rights only of persons appointed by the Secretary of State prior to the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1919. There would not have been such a proviso if it was intended that the existing or recurring rights of all public servants appointed prior to the commencement of the Act were to be retained. In the notification itself reference is made to rules made by the Secretary of State in s 96-B (2) of the Act. The Secretary of State for India has framed Rules under s 96-B (2) of the Government of India Act, 1919, regulating the classification of the civil services in India, their conditions of service, discipline and conduct. Those Rules also provide for delegation of powers. They are published in the Gazette of India of 21st June 1924 at page 552 (No. F 472-II-23). By Rule I the following classification is made of officers of the Local Government.—

1. The all India services,
2. The Provincial services,
3. The Subordinate services.
4. Officers holding special posts.

An Excise Inspector may come under class 2 or 3. The definition of Provincial services given in Rule III proves that he comes under class 3. The Provincial services of every Local Government are detailed in a schedule to the Rules and the schedule relating to the United Provinces includes an Assistant Excise Commissioner and no officer lower in rank in that Department. The applicant, therefore, is a member of the subordinate services, which are defined in Rule IV as consisting of all minor administrative, executive and ministerial posts to which appointments are made by the Local Government or by an authority subordinate to the Local Government. Under Rule XV a Local Government is empowered to delegate to any subordinate authority subject to such conditions, if any, as it may prescribe any of the powers conferred by Rule VIII in regard to officers of the subordinate services. Proviso to this Rule relates to an appeal to the Local Government. Rule XII lays down—

"without prejudice to the provision of any law for the time being in force, the Local Government may for good or sufficient reasons

(5) remove or

(6) dismiss

any officer holding a post in a subordinate service .. ;

The Excise Act does not interfere with the Local Government's power of removal or dismissal, in fact, it gives such power and the power of delegation of authority over again. We are of opinion, therefore, that the authority No 10 granted by the notification is not beyond the power of the Local Government to grant.

Coming to the question of delegation, once the Local Government has delegated its power the authority which actually removes the public servant from office is not the authority of the Local Government but the authority to whom the power is delegated. To take an instance, the Hon'ble Chief Justice of this Court has been authorised and empowered under s. 6 of the Letters Patent of this Court by the Crown acting in pursuance of an Act of Parliament to appoint officials of this Court and to dismiss them. If the argument of the applicant's learned Counsel is to prevail it may with equal cogency be argued that every official down to an orderly peon of this Court is appointed and removed by the Crown through the agency of the Chief Justice and for his prosecution under s. 161 the sanction of the Local Government would be necessary. We do not think that such an argument would be accepted. There is no mention made in s 197 (1) of the Cr. P. C. of any delegated authority. Obviously the intention was to simplify the law regarding sanction in the new Cr. P. C., and the circle of public servants for whose prosecution for bribery sanction was necessary under the previous Code has been narrowed. Under the former Code sanction of some authority (other than the Local Government) to whom the power was delegated by the Local Government to grant sanction was necessary for the prosecution of certain public servants. Any sanction for prosecution in their cases is no longer necessary.

Two rulings were quoted in support of the contention put forward on behalf of the applicant that the dismissal by the Excise Commissioner really meant dismissal by the Local Government. In re Abdul Khadir Saheb (1), Emperor v. Khan Chand (2) The first case which is a Madras case contains merely the opinion unsupported by reasons of a Single Judge of that Court. With all respect we do not feel justified in following it. In the second case which is of the Lahore High Court and of date 24th March 1922, no rule had been framed to provide for cases of officers appointed previous to the date of the notification. We have already indicated that the notification of the Local Government in the present case provides for the dismissal of Excise Officers appointed prior to the date of the notification. The ruling of the Lahore High Court, therefore, has no application here.

For these reasons we decide that no sanction was necessary for the prosecution of the applicant and that his trial in the Court of the Magistrate was a legal trial.

We now come to the facts of the case. As notice has been issued to the applicant to show cause why the sentence passed on him should not be enhanced, he is entitled under the provisions of s. 439 (6) to show cause against his conviction. We have been taken through the entire evidence on the record. We have studied it and can discover no reason to disagree with the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge in appeal. The evidence does not rest here merely on the testimony of witnesses who depose to the paying of the bribe. There have been other incidents in the case which convince us of the appellant's guilt. The complainant Kailash Chander was a contractor for the retail sale of liquor at a shop in village Jhalu. There was a complaint made against him to the Police by one Karhira chamar on the 14th May 1924 and the applicant Excise Inspector went to the spot to hold an inquiry on 15th June. It appears to be the practice of the Inspector to receive certain sums described as an annual fee from the contractors in order to save them from petty prosecutions under the Excise Act. With this lever of a complaint the Excise Inspector demanded his annual fee from Kailash Chander. His demand was of Rs. 200 and it was finally settled at Rs. 160. Kailash Chander stated that on June 10th he paid Rs. 60 to the Inspector at his house at Bijnor. Two witnesses to the payment were produced, Baldeo Singh the contractor's uncle, who also has a drug shop four miles away from Jhalu at Haldaur and Dalchand. Apparently the applicant was not satisfied with this part-payment and Kailash Chander had not the means to pay more. The Inspector kept on demanding the balance. In July there was another complaint against Kailash Chander brought by one Lallu and Kailash Chander was sentenced to a short term of imprisonment but acquitted on appeal. He believed that the Inspector was at the bottom of this complaint. While he was attending to his defence in this case the Inspector reported his absence from his liquor shop and had him prosecuted in the Court of the Excise Officer. This case was fixed for hearing on the 24th September 1924. The incidents of that date and the following day the 25th September are important. The Magistrate Thakur Phul Singh has deposed that on the 24th September the applicant Excise Inspector appeared in the forenoon and stated that Kailash Chander accused of that case and the prosecution witnesses were absent and that the hearing had better be postponed. The Magistrate had to attend to treasury work and at about 1-30 p. m. when he took up the case and had Kailash Chander called, Kailash Chander appeared in Court. The Magistrate then inquired of the Inspector why he had given wrong information about the accused and the witnesses. There is no evidence that the Inspector at the time gave any reply. Kailash Chander explained that he had been present since the forenoon but that there had been a talk between him and the Inspector of a compromise and withdrawal of the charge. Thakur Phul Singh has stated that the same day he heard in the Treasury Office that the Excise Inspector's orderly had taken a currency note for Rs. 100 to be cashed but that before it could be cashed the case had been called and the peon was called back by the Excise Inspector. Babu Lal Assistant Treasurer had deposed to this incident of a currency note being brought to the Treasury for encashment. Kailash Chander's story is that the Excise Inspector had consented to refund the sum of Rs 60 and it was on this account that the currency note of Rs 100 was taken to the Treasury to be cashed. It is certain that the note was taken to the Treasury. The appellant did not explain the reason for this proposed encashment of the note but falsely denied having sent any note to the Treasury that day. This denial and the absence of explanation, which it was the duty of the appellant to give under the circumstances of the present case, support the testimony of Kailash Chander. On the 25th September the excise case was taken up again and when the statement of Kailash Chander was recorded as an accused person he gave the reason for his prosecution to be his inability to pay the balance of the bribe of Rs 160 to the Inspector.

There is no evidence to show, nor was it alleged before us, that when this charge was openly made by Kailash Chander the Inspector gave vent to any explanation or denied the charge immediately, as any honest man would have done. After the statement of Kailash Chander was recorded the case was postponed for defence evidence. The parties to the case went out and there was a quarrel between the Inspector and Kailash Chander, who from words came to blows and closed in with each other. The witnesses for the prosecution support Kailash Chander's account that on going out of the Court he again demanded the refund of Rs 60 whereupon the Sub-Inspector promised to pay it at his house and he retorted that he was constantly being put off by alternative promises of payment in Court or at home. The two witnesses Harkishen Das and Mathura who are men of respectable position in life have supported Kailash Chander's story. On behalf of the defence certain Pleaders came forward and deposed that at the time of the quarrel there was no mention of a bribe and Kailash Chander simply threatened to settle with the Inspector before he himself was punished by Court. During the quarrel another Deputy Magistrate B. Budh Sen appeared on the scene and to him also Kailash Chander spoke about the bribe and the Inspector's refusal to refund the sum of Rs. 60.

We have already made reference to the absence of any explanation of the currency note having been taken to the Treasury.

In the matter of the quarrel on the 25th also, the probability is all in favour of the prosecution. It is certain that in the Court of Thakur Phul Singh the complainant Kailash Chander charged the Sub-Inspector with taking a bribe and as soon as B. Budh Sen, another Magistrate, appeared outside the Court during the quarrel between Kailash Chander and the Inspector the former again made mention of the bribe. We, therefore, refuse to believe the defence witnesses who state that during the intervening quarrel between the Inspector and the contractor no reference whatsoever was made to the taking of the bribe by the Inspector. In our opinion the defence witnesses are purposely concealing the words that passed between the parties with respect to the bribe.

It was argued that Baldeo Singh and Dalchand who depose to the actual payment of the bribe are unreliable witnesses because Baldeo Singh is uncle of the complainant and the other witness Dal Chand was not mentioned as a witness by the complainant when his statement was first recorded on the 4th October. As rightly pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, whatever value may be attached to this testimony standing by itself, the incidents of the 24th and 25th September supported by other incidents can leave no doubt in any one's mind as to the payment by Kailash Chander to the applicant of Rs. 60 in June 1924.

Some contradiction was pointed out between the complaint in which it was stated that the bribe was paid in Jhalu and the complainant's statement on oath where he stated that the bribe was paid in Bijnor. The complaint, however, was not written by the complainant himself and it is evident that the petition writer wrote it without carefully understanding the allegations of the complainant. We are satisfied that the appellant was rightly convicted.

We have also to consider the question whether the sentence should be enhanced. The accused has been sentenced under s. 161 of the Indian Penal Code to one month's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 or in default three months' simple imprisonment. When he applied in revision against this conviction and sentence the matter came before Mr. Justice Kanhaiya Lal who on the 31st August concluded his order as follows :—

"If the facts found by the Courts below are true the sentence passed on the accused also requires to be examined with a view to determine its adequacy to meet the case of a systematic or annual levy alleged in this case. Let the case be, therefore, referred to a Bench of two Judges and let notice also go to the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced in case his revision is rejected."

The learned Sessions Judge, when hearing the appeal, was invited, as we are informed, to refer the case to this Court for enhancement of sentence. He concluded his judgment as follows:—

"I am not inclined to press for an enhancement of sentence. Imprisonment even for one month is a very serious matter for a man in the position of an Excise Inspector and the expenses of the case in addition to the fine will probably ruin him. His conviction of itself is enough to debar him from further Government service. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal and uphold the conviction and sentence."

We appreciate the considerations stated by the learned Sessions Judge but there can be no question as to the gravity of the offence committed by the accused. It is obvious that this type of offence can be very easily committed without much risk of exposure in view of the great unwillingness of victims to run the risk of failing to establish a perfectly true charge if they make it. In the present case if the evidence is to be believed and we have said that we believe it, it is clear that the incident which has been the subject of the present trial was not a solitary lapse on the part of the accused. He had established a regular system by which he levied a toll annually upon these licence-holders. Believing this evidence as we do, we find ourselves in agreement with Mr. Justice Kanhaiya Lal that the sentence inflicted was wholly inadequate to the offence.

We, therefore, while dismissing the application in revision enhance the sentence of one month's simple imprisonment to a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment and maintain the fine and the alternative sentence in default of payment of the fine. The applicant will surrender to his bail.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 431 of 1925.

(CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 357 of 1925.

July 22, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jackson.

—PETITIONER.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—“Means”, what are—Husband, unemployed and without property, liability of, to maintain wife—Remedy, nature of.

The word 'means' in s. 488 of the Cr. P. C. does not signify only visible means such as real property or definite employment. If a man is healthy and able-bodied, he must be taken to have the 'means' to support his wife.

Section 488 of the Cr. P. C. provides a speedy remedy and safeguards a deserted wife or child from starvation; but when other issues are raised, they ought to be settled in the Civil Courts to which persons aggrieved by orders under the section ought to take their case.

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Pollachi Division, dated the 28th April 1925.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachari, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—Petitioner seeks to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Pollachi, under s. 488 of the Cr. P. C., by which he is directed to pay rupees ten (Rs. 10) per mensem as maintenance to his first wife. The order contains no clear issues or findings and the Magistrate should understand that vituperation adds nothing to the force of a judicial pronouncement.

Apparently upon the evidence of counter-petitioner and her three witnesses, the Magistrate finds that she was driven out of her home, not allowed to come back, and refused maintenance. He rejects the defence evidence to the contrary because he thinks the plea of enmity "rather mameol," meaning presumably that it is a false plea often advanced. He finds that though slightly lame the counter-petitioner is able to work and accordingly he orders rupees ten (Rs. 10) per mensem, not an extravagant rate for people in decent circumstances. He also hopes that the family will assist the husband to find the money.

Of course, maintenance can only be levied from the husband, and in expressing this hope the Magistrate passes no order against the husband's family. The point most strenuously pressed by petitioner is that since the husband is only 19 years old and unemployed, he has no means to support his wife. I do not take "means" in s. 488 of the Cr. P. C., to signify only visible means such as real property or definite employment. If a man is healthy and able-bodied he must be taken to have the means to support his wife. I, therefore, find no absolute ground for interference; but I agree with the petitioner that this order is not altogether satisfactory. It should have been more clearly set forth whether the wife has merely left the house upon the arrival of the second wife or has been actually driven out. If petitioner's remedy were concluded, there might be reason for re-opening the matter. But it is obvious from the Statute itself that persons aggrieved by these magisterial orders are expected to take their case to the Civil Courts. Section 488 of the Cr. P. C., provides a speedy remedy and safeguards a deserted wife or child from starvation, but when other issues are raised, they should be settled in the Civil Courts, and nothing is to be gained by protracted litigation in the Criminal Courts. Doubtless it is with that intention that no appeal has been allowed from orders under s. 488.

Therefore, I decline to interfere and admission is refused.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 592 OF 1925.

Present — Mr. Justice Sulaiman.

MULAI RAI—ACCUSED—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 44, 190—Threat to institute civil suit, whether threat of "injury".

A threat to institute a civil suit for a declaration of right against any person who is objecting to such right does not amount to a threat of "injury" within the meaning of s. 190 of the Penal Code. [p. 861, col. 2]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Benares, dated the 18th July 1925.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a criminal revision from an order convicting the accused under s. 190 of the Indian Penal Code and sentencing him to a fine of Rs. 55.

The applicant is the mukhtar-am of Musammat Daulata Kunwar who had constructed a temple inside her house, installed idols therein and performed pūja by sounding conches in the evening. The Muhammadans of the mohalla objected to this and approached the District Magistrate who deputed a joint Magistrate to inspect the locality. The learned Magistrate being satisfied that there was an apprehension of some dispute passed an order under s. 144 of the Cr. P. C. on the 4th of February 1925 directing Musammat Daulata Kunwar to keep all the doors of the room in which the idols were kept closed and bolted, and to abstain from making any musical or other noise during a short period. After this the District Magistrate must have been trying to get the matter settled amicably if possible. On the 25th of February 1925 a large number of notices including one to Hafizullah were sent out by the applicant under the name of Musammat Daulata Kunwar. As the notice to Hafizullah is the real basis of this prosecution it is necessary to set forth its terms in some detail. Its purport was as follows — "You along with others drew the attention of the District Magistrate and got him to depute the joint Magistrate to inspect the locality and convinced him that there was a fear of religious dispute which induced him to pass an order under s. 144 of the Cr. P. C. You are, therefore, given this notice that within one week of this date you should in writing express your dissociation from the said acts and give it in writing that you have no connection or concern with those acts and that you do not desire to interfere with the worship which I perform in accordance with Hindu dharamsastras. If you fail to do so then you also will be impleaded in the array of the defendants in the civil suit which I am about to bring." The Courts below have held that the threat contained in the notice amounted to a threat of injury to a person for the purpose of inducing that person to refrain or desist from making a legal application for protection against any injury to any public servant legally empowered as such to give such protection. The view taken by the Courts below is that the real intention of the accused was to make the complainant desist from approaching the District Magistrate any further. Perhaps it would be best to quote the words of the Appellate Court itself. "The notice in question goes beyond the legitimate requirements of the case, and reading the entire notice and considering other circumstances attending the matter in dispute the impression which one gets is that the notice was by way of a threat of a civil suit against the person to whom the notice was addressed by which it was intended that he should refrain from approaching the District Magistrate about the matter and to seek his protection."

When the alleged threat of injury is contained in a written notice it is very doubtful how far the Courts are entitled to go outside the language of that notice in order to infer an intention which does not appear from that writing. The notice does not ask the addressee to refrain from approaching the District Magistrate any longer. Nor does it refer to any pending dispute. The Courts below, however, have taken the true intention to have been to make the complainant refrain from approaching the magisterial authorities. Assuming for the sake of argument that it was open to the Courts below to infer this intention, the question still remains whether the threat of the institution of a civil suit is an injury within the meaning of s. 190 of the Indian Penal Code.

It is noteworthy that the addressee was called upon to make three statements in writing (1) dissociating himself from the previous acts, (2) stating that he had no concern or connection with them and (3) expressing his desire not to interfere with the worship. Unless the addressee had on the previous occasion made an objection to the worship or taken any part in approaching the authorities or unless he was denying her right to perform the worship, Musammât Daulata Kunwar would have no cause of action for maintaining a civil suit against him. Before, therefore, the addressee was to be impleaded in a civil suit recklessly it was essential to know for certain whether there was any cause of action against him. The notice mentions in express terms that if he does not comply with the request of Musammât Daulata Kunwar he would be impleaded in the civil suit.

The non-compliance with the request contained in the notice would have involved Hafizullah being impleaded in the suit. Does the institution of a civil suit against a person amount to an injury within the meaning of s. 190? The word 'injury' has been defined in s. 44 of the Indian Penal Code as denoting any harm whatever illegally caused to any person in body, mind reputation or property. Musammât Daulata Kunwar had a right to bring a civil suit for a declaration of her right to maintain the temple and perform the worship. Whether she would ultimately succeed or not is quite a different matter, but she had a right to maintain a suit against any person who was objecting to her right. Can the institution of a civil suit against a person who was so objecting be called a harm illegally caused? The recourse to a Civil Court cannot amount to causing an illegal harm. Under certain circumstances a false complain against a person may be an illegally caused harm. It may also be possible to conceive of cases where a totally false suit, vexatious and frivolous in its nature intended to harass a person, may amount to a harm illegally caused. But in this particular case the institution of a civil suit for a mere declaration of right against any person who was objecting to that right cannot be said to be a harm illegally caused in body, mind reputation or property. The complainant Hafizullah was exaimed in this case and from his evidence it appears that he himself had done nothing in particular before the order under s. 144 was passed. He has stated that he became surprised as to how notice was served on him. He had no acquaintance with Musammât Daulata Kunwar. He had never complained about the temple and never wanted before nor did want then to do anything against the Musammât's temple. He had not asked any one to do anything in respect of the notice he had received and he said that he did not reply to the notice as he thought that the notice had been sent to him by mistake. These statements make it quite clear that there was nothing personal in sending the notice to Hafizullah. The accused's version that the object was to ascertain whether Hafizullah was objecting to her right in order to make up one's mind whether or not he should be impleaded in the civil suit, appears to be not unfounded. I accordingly allow this revision and setting aside the conviction and the sentence acquit the accused of the charge and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 97 OF 1925.

April 15, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir John Bucknill,
Kt., and Mr. Justice Macpherson.AJO MIAN AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—PETITIONERSversusEMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 257, 439—Opportunity given to accused to cross-examine prosecution witness—Witness, re-call of, at request of accused—Refusal of Magistrate to re-call witness—Discretion—Revision—High Court, interference by.

While a Magistrate is bound under s 257 (1) of the Cr. P. C. to issue process on the application of an accused person who has entered on his defence for compelling the attendance of a witness for the purpose of examination or cross-examination (save in certain stated circumstances which the Magistrate must find and must set forth in writing), the proviso to that section on the other hand definitely prohibits the Magistrate from issuing such process, if the accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining the witness after the charge was framed, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that such attendance is necessary for the purposes of justice, that is to say, unless he is convinced of the existence of the strongest possible grounds for disregarding the prohibition. The exception to the prohibition must not be read as swallowing up the prohibition or the whole proviso as enjoining that the Magistrate shall issue process if he is not satisfied that the attendance of the witness is unnecessary for the ends of justice, or if he is not satisfied that (as in the case of the witnesses not covered by the proviso) the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. On the contrary the prohibition may not be disregarded unless in the opinion of the Magistrate the purposes of justice not merely warrant but demand such disregard. It is not incumbent upon the Magistrate to record in writing his reasons for not being satisfied that the attendance of a witness is necessary for the purposes of justice [p 869, cols 1 & 2].

If a good case is made out that the Magistrate's refusal to summon the witness was outside the limits of a reasonable discretion the High Court would interfere with the exercise of such discretion, but the position must be most clearly established that the Magistrate's decision was unreasonable and improper before the interference of the High Court could properly be invoked or expected. Criminal revision from the decision of the Sessions Judge, Bhagalpur, modifying that of the Magistrate, First Class, Bhagalpur, dated the 23rd December 1924.

Sir Ali Imam and Mr. S. A. Sani, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Bucknill, J.—This was an application in criminal revisional jurisdiction made on behalf of six Muhammadans. The first was found guilty by a Magistrate of the

First Class at Bhagalpur, on the 23rd December last of an offence punishable under s. 326, Indian Penal Code (causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon); he was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. He was also found guilty of an offence punishable under s. 148, Indian Penal Code (rioting armed with a deadly weapon). For this offence he was again sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment, the sentences were to run consecutively. The other five applicants were all found guilty, firstly, of an offence punishable under s. 147, Indian Penal Code (riot) and, secondly, of an offence punishable under the combined provisions of ss. 326 and 149, Indian Penal Code, that is to say, of causing grievous hurt with deadly weapons whilst members of an unlawful assembly. The object of the unlawful assembly was stated to be to assault Hindus. The second applicant was in respect of each of these offences sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year; but the sentences have been ordered in his case to run concurrently. The other applicants were sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment in respect of each offence and in their cases also their sentences were ordered to be concurrent.

On appeal to the Sessions Judge of Bhagalpur the conviction of the first applicant was set aside in so far as the charge against him under s. 326 was concerned. His conviction and sentence, however, under s. 148 was upheld. The convictions and sentences of the other applicants under s. 147 were also upheld, but, although the convictions under the combined provisions of ss. 326 and 149 were upheld, the sentences were set aside in view of the fact that double sentences in respect of such cognate offences were not regarded by the Sessions Judge as being permissible.

The circumstances which gave rise to the prosecution were very unfortunate and were the result of some communal disturbance at Bhagalpur between the Muhammadans and Hindus. It is said that the Hindus were celebrating a festival with considerable ceremony and that the passing of their procession with music and song close to a Moslem mosque gave some umbrage to the Muhammadans. It is alleged that the Muhammadans attacked some Hindus and injured some of them considerably. We are informed that more than one set of charges has arisen from this affair. It is, however, with the facts of this prosecution which is the subject-matter of the present application that we are at the moment concerned.

The learned Counsel who has appeared for the applicants has urged three points before us. The first is that his clients have been the victims of certain illegalities in procedure at the hands of the Trying Magistrate. The second is that there was no common object as alleged in the charge, viz., assault on Hindus, but merely an isolated series of encounters for which perhaps individuals might properly be found guilty of specific offences if they were brought home to them. Thirdly, that in the peculiar conditions exemplified in the evidence the sentences imposed are unnecessarily severe.

With regard to the first point it seems clear that after the prosecution case had proceeded for sometime, the Counsel who was appearing for some of the applicants fell ill, he was assisted by some Pleaders who asked for a postponement of the trial on the ground that they were not in a position to undertake the cross-examination of the remaining few prosecution witnesses. The Magistrate, however, who had, from the commencement, intimated his intention to the parties of continuing if possible to hear the case de die in diem refused the application. The result was that some five of the prosecution witnesses including both members of the Police force and private persons were not cross-examined. It is not seriously contended that the Magistrate acted either illegally or really unreasonably in what he did, one can only agree with the learned Counsel for the applicants that the attitude of the Pleaders who were appearing for the applicants cannot be the subject of commendation. It is obvious that under the circumstances they should have done their best to help their clients and it would seem that they were not doing so by the attitude which they thought fit to adopt. However, when the accused filed their list of witnesses and applied to the Magistrate under s. 257 of the Cr. P. C., they asked that these five witnesses should be ordered to attend for the purpose of cross-examination. It is quite clear that it is contemplated under the provisions of that section that they had a right to make this application and indeed it has been laid down in the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sheo Prakash Singh v. Rawlins (1), that if the Magistrate in fact does accede to such a request the accused are entitled to cross-examine such witnesses so called to the Court. The section itself, however, gives the Magistrate certain powers to refuse such an application; whether it is the case of a witness who is desired to be called for the defence or whether it is one whom it is desired only to cross-examine. These grounds are either that the application has in the Magistrate's view been made for the purposes of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice; and he has to record in writing his decision for his refusal. In this case the Magistrate refused to grant the application for the order that these prosecution witnesses, who had not been cross-examined, should attend for that purpose. In rejecting the application, the Magistrate in his order-sheet has written: "I have already rejected the prayer to adjourn on that account and see no reason to revise my opinion and grant it now." Had the section rested there, it is possible that the Magistrate could have been rightly said not to have given in writing any ground for his decision which is contemplated by the section as a good ground for his refusal; but there is a proviso to the section which alters the complexion of his action. The proviso to the section is to the effect that, when an accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining any witness after the charge has been framed, the attendance of such witness shall not be compelled under the section's provisions unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the purposes of justice.

I think that it is quite clear in this case that the Magistrate was not satisfied that it was necessary for the purposes of justice to compel the attendance of these witnesses, but it is contended that the Magistrate cannot unreasonably say or assume the position that he is not so satisfied. In other words, if, where there exist cogent reasons why the Magistrate should have been satisfied, it is illegal for him to say that he is not; his non-satisfaction must be based on reasonable grounds. It is argued that in this case there were very good reasons for thinking that it was necessary in the interests of justice that these witnesses should be directed to attend for cross-examination.

There can be no doubt that in this case an opportunity was in fact afforded to the accused to cross-examine these witnesses at the proper time; it may not have been possible for the accused's leading Counsel to conduct the cross-examination but the accused were represented it is admitted, by other lawyers.

The learned Counsel for the applicants does not contend that the mere fact that an accused's lawyers declined to cross-examine such witnesses or that the mere fact that such witnesses were not cross-examined constitute factors which would justify an argument that a Magistrate's opinion of satisfaction that under such circumstances it was not necessary for him to order the attendance of such witnesses under s. 257 could be attacked, for to do so would, of course, be to contend that the proviso to the section was meaningless and that whenever for any reason prosecution witnesses were not cross-examined they must be ordered to attend if application for their cross-examination is made by an accused under s. 257.

What, however, he does urge is that this Court should scrutinize the reasons why the Magistrate was satisfied that the attendance of the witnesses was not necessary and that if it be shown to this Court that there were existing reasons why their attendance was necessary for cross-examination for the purposes of justice this Court should interfere in its revisional jurisdiction and hold that the Magistrate's refusal was unreasonable and inequitable. I am ready to agree that if a good case was made out that the Magistrate's refusal was outside the limits of reasonable discretion this Court should and would interfere; but I am sure that that position must be most clearly established, (i.e., that the Magistrate's decision was unreasonable and improper) before the interference of this Court can properly be invoked or expected.

I do not, however, think that in this case any such position has been established. The point was argued at some length before the Sessions Judge who deals with it in his judgment thus:—"There remains to be considered the matter of prejudice raised by the appellants. On 15th November 1924, after the framing of the charges, and while the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses was in progress a petition was put in on behalf of some of the accused stating that Mr. Hassan the defending Counsel had fallen ill and asking for an adjournment. This was refused. On that date some witnesses were cross-examined on behalf of two of the accused, namely, Sachidanand Singh, Sub-Inspector, Upendra Mohan Ghose, Inspector, Rajendra Prasad, Deputy Superintendent, Muhammad Ahsan, Sub-Inspector and some others. The Pleaders appearing on behalf of the other accused, that is to say accused whom Mr. Hassan was defending refused to cross-examine at all. On 19th November, after the prosecution had closed their case, a petition was put in on behalf of these accused to re-call the four witnesses mentioned above for cross-examination under s. 257 of the Cr. P. C. This was rejected by the Magistrate. Consequently these four persons were not cross-examined on behalf of the accused for whom Mr. Hassan appeared.

"Section 257 lays down clearly that the Magistrate need not re-call witnesses whom the defence have had an opportunity for cross-examining unless he is satisfied that it is necessary for the purposes of justice. The order of the Magistrate accordingly is perfectly legal, nor do I consider that he exercised his discretion wrongly. It is not suggested that the Pleaders appearing for the other accused were insufficiently instructed or particularly incompetent and if it was considered that the Counsel appearing for the other accused had not covered the whole ground in his cross-examination their conduct in refusing to put any questions at all is deserving of re-proof. In any case these four officers did not fully implicate any of the appellants except Ajo, Hafiz Gafoor, and Abdul Latif. The rest of the evidence is sufficiently strong against the two former, and Abdul Latif was one of the two men on behalf of whom cross-examination was actually made."

These observations seem substantially to show that the Magistrate's decision could not have been regarded as unreasonable. Nor has the learned Counsel for the applicants in the course of his able and interesting argument been able to prove to us in what way with certainty his clients' position was prejudiced or could have been improved by cross-examination of these witnesses: all that he can urge is that it might perhaps have been possible from a cross-examination of these witnesses to have extracted from them something which might have been of advantage to the accused. But this is not, I think enough in order to justify this Court's interference in a case such as this and on a decision based on the proviso to s. 257, Cr. P. C., it must be shown to this Court not that there possibly by some chance might have been but that in fact there was matter to be obtained from the witnesses sought to be called for cross-examination which would have materially affected the result of the trial; as the Assistant Government Advocate has aptly expressed it, the onus is clearly on the applicants to establish that position; and I do not consider that in this case they have succeeded in so doing.

With regard to the second point urged by the learned Counsel for the applicants, namely, that there was really no common object as laid in the charge (that is to say, of assault on Hindus) he bases his argument upon a close and detailed examination of the somewhat confused phases of what took place on the day of occurrence. He shows that there were a series of not very closely if at all connected events on that day; but they had for some little time before been preceded by happenings which had given rise to a good deal of Muhammadan misgivings and chagrin. In the opening words of the applicant's petition "For some time past the relations between the two communities, viz., the Hindu and the Muhammadan of Bhagalpur had become strained and the feelings were running very high." The Hindus had, it is said, issued notices to their co-religionists on 21st August 1921, to the effect that it was contemplated celebrating shortly their janamashatmi festival with considerable splendour, and on the 22nd they issued another notice asking that they (the Hindus) should, on the following day, keep their shops shut and stop business and join the dadhikado procession which was to take place on the 23rd.

The Moslems seem to have been afraid that they would be insulted in some fashion and went so far as to apply to the Sadr Sub-Divisional Officer at Bhagalpur asking for Police arrangements to be made in order to prevent a breach of the peace and that the Sub-Divisional Officer should take some preventive measures: the Sub-Divisional Officer was a Moslem gentleman, he did not take any measures to prevent the procession taking place but apparently took some Police precautions which seem indeed unhappily to have been needed.

On the 23rd the procession took place, it seems that a large number of Moslems were gathered in and around a large mosque which the procession passed. The procession was guided and shepherded by the Police; it was carrying an image of Sri Krishna to the Ganges; some of the processionists carried bamboos with flags. Apparently trouble was only averted as the procession passed the mosque, by the Police for some stones were thrown at the tail of the procession by several Muhammadans. Some of the processionists (the procession is said to have been about 5000 strong) were beginning to throw stones back and some of them began to jump over the rails at the side of the road and to run back towards the Muhammadans, but the Police managed to stop any fracas. The procession went on to the Ganges and then was apparently returning; but it was diverted by another route: some (perhaps 60) Hindus, partly processionists and partly perhaps spectators, were re-tracing their steps by the route by which the procession had come and drawing towards the mosque, at this stage a number of Moslems, said to be armed with swords, axes and lathis, raised shouts and ran out, the Police tried to prevent any outbreak and so also did some very respectable Moslems, they seem to have prevented the Moslems from attacking this party but some of the Muhammadans (amongst them being it is said the applicants) turning back began to knock about any Hindus whom they met, several of whom were witnesses in this case. The applicant No. 1 Ajo Mian is well identified as being the leader or one of the leaders of this party of Moslems to which the accused (and no doubt others) belonged, he is said to have carried both a sword and a lathi, and I regret to say to have used the former vigorously.

Applicant No. 2 Hafiz Gafoor is shown to have carried and used a Mirzapur danta which is a heavy stick. Applicant No. 3 Sheik Janglu is said to have carried a lathi.

Applicant No. 4 Sheik Bado is said to have been armed either with what is described as a meat cutting instrument or a small lathi and to have been throwing stones. Appellant No. 5 Abdul Latif is said to have been armed with a sword or a lathi whilst a lathi only is said to have been carried by applicant No. 6 Abdul Razak.

I have at the commencement of my observations stated what sentences were imposed: One year on Ajo Mian, one year on Hafiz Gafoor, and six months on each of the rest. I cannot see any good reason for justifying the attack which the applicants made, although I am quite prepared to think that they felt a good deal vexed at the Hindu religious demonstration. I have, however, very little sympathy with people who use swords unnecessarily in an emeute.

I think, however, that taking all the circumstances into consideration, the sentence on Ajo Mian may be reduced to six months and on the others to three months rigorous imprisonment and I should like it actually drawn to their attention in thus taking a lenient view of what might have been, had it not been for the Police and the more sober-minded members of their own community, a most serious matter, that I most earnestly trust that in future they will endeavour to keep on good terms with their neighbours whatever differences of creed may separate their religious and social lives. They have got to live side by side and the many ties which should bind them together are really stronger than the forces which sometimes seem to tend to separate them.

Macherson, J.—I agree to the order proposed.

On behalf of Ajo, Hafiz Gafoor, Janglu and Bado the first four petitioners, chief reliance is placed on the first argument. Now while a Magistrate is bound under s. 257 (1) to issue process on the application of an accused who has entered on his defence for compelling the attendance of a witness for the purpose of examination or cross-examination (save in certain stated circumstances which he must find and must set forth in writing), the proviso to that enactment on the other hand definitely prohibits the Magistrate from issuing such process, if the accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining the witness after the charge was framed, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that such attendance is necessary for the purposes of justice, that is to say, unless he is convinced of the existence of the strongest possible grounds for disregarding the prohibition. The exception to the prohibition must not be read as swallowing up the prohibition or the whole proviso as enjoining that the Magistrate shall issue process if he is not satisfied that the attendance of the witness is unnecessary for the ends of justice or if he is not satisfied that (as in the case of the witnesses not covered by the proviso) the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. On the contrary the prohibition may not be disregarded unless in the opinion of the Magistrate the purposes of justice not merely warrant but demand such disregard. It is also clear that it is not incumbent upon him (though it is often expedient) to record in writing the reason for not being satisfied—the natural course would be to require a record of reasons for disregarding (not for not disregarding) a statutory prohibition.

Though there may be exceptional cases where the Court can see at once that the attendance of a witness referred to in the proviso should be compelled, it is ordinarily for the applicant to satisfy the Magistrate that it is necessary for the purposes of justice that his application for compelling the attendance of such a witness should be granted. In the present instance the first four petitioners had had an opportunity of cross-examining certain witnesses through Pleaders who represented them throughout the trial, but they had not availed themselves of it. They sought to bring themselves within the proviso by merely pointing out that their Counsel who would have cross-examined was ill. But much more than the mere statement of that fact was necessary in the circumstances of the case to show that the attendance of the witnesses who had not been cross-examined on the petitioners' behalf, was necessary for the purposes of justice. For instance that there were definite matters of importance on which the witnesses ought to be cross-examined on behalf of the petitioners. Only general considerations, however; were advanced and no real attempt was made to satisfy the Court that the application came within the exception to the statutory prohibition. Manifestly those considerations failed to satisfy the Magistrate. Now, the burden of showing in appeal or revision that the Magistrate ought to have been satisfied lies very heavily on the appellant or petitioner. The discretion is committed to the Magistrate and if valid reasons for exercising it in favour of the accused are not advanced in his Court or do not clearly appear from the record as it stood at the time, it is impossible for the superior Court to hold that he was wrong in failing to disregard the statutory prohibition in favour of the accused. Little weight is to be accorded to considerations which did not occur to the applicant at the time and are of the nature of afterthought. It is clear, therefore, that even if attention is restricted to the considerations in favour of the argument, there is no ground for interfering in revision with the order of the Magistrate.

There are, however, special considerations in the present case which militate against interference in revision. Not only is it not shown that there were materials before the Magistrate on which he was satisfied or which ought to have satisfied him that process to compel the attendance of the witnesses who had not been cross-examined was necessary for the purposes of justice, but it is obvious that he was not so satisfied and that he was even satisfied to the contrary. The parties had been warned that the trial would proceed from day to day and the Pleaders of petitioners Nos. 1 to 4 ought to have been ready. Mr. Naim an experienced Counsel, cross-examined at length the witnesses present on that date on behalf of Latif and Razak petitioners Nos. 5 and 6 and on the case generally prima facie covering the whole ground. Several of the numerous Pleaders appearing on behalf of the first four petitioners were also retained on behalf of Latif and Razak and two of them at least were present in Court. There were sixteen accused on trial and when Mr. Naim concluded not only petitioners Nos. 1 to 4 but also all the other ten accused declined to cross-examine. It was thus even possible for the Magistrate on consideration of all matters before him actually to be satisfied that it was not necessary for the ends of justice to compel the attendance of the four prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination.

It is not unusual for the defence to take advantage of a contretemps of the nature indicated in order to make capital out of it in appeal or revision, especially where, as in this instance, the risk involved is negligible. In circumstances such as have been detailed the Trying Magistrate alone is in a position to gauge the situation and to appreciate whether the refusal to cross-examine and the subsequent application for process against the same witnesses has been merely "tactical," and thus it behoves superior Courts to be on their guard against suggestions as to the conduct of the trial.

Finally reference may be made to the specific finding of the learned Sessions Judge that the elimination of the depositions of the witnesses not cross-examined on behalf of petitioners Nos. 1 to 4 would not improve the position of these petitioners, since those witnesses do not advance the prosecution case against petitioners Nos. 3 and 4 and the other evidence on record is adequate to establish the charges against the petitioners Ajo and Haffz Ghafur.

The first ground is, therefore, without merit.

The second plea on behalf of appellants fails since the common object set out in the charge of assaulting Hindus—not the processionists only but also any members of the community met with—has been found to be established, while as to the sentences I would join in the hope that the reduction may have a beneficial effect on the relations between the two communities at Bhagalpur.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—U. P. Village Panchayat Act (VI of 1920), ss. 31, 32—Criminal trial—Acquittal—Revision—Interference by High Court.

Section 32 of the U. P. Village Panchayat Act applies only to suits; the corresponding provision applicable to criminal cases is contained in s. 31 of the Act.

Where an Appellate Court sets aside a conviction on the ground that the proceedings in the Trial Court were without jurisdiction, the finding being based on a misreading of a statutory provision, the High Court is entitled to set aside the order of acquittal in revision.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Basti, dated the 16th October 1925.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Applicant.

Mr. Kumuda Prasad, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order of the District Magistrate of Basti on appeal from a conviction under ss. 352 and 426, Indian Penal Code. The case was instituted before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who made it over to the Tahsildar. The Tahsildar convicted the accused and sentenced them to payment of fine. No question of the application of the Village Panchayat Act seems to have been raised at any stage of the proceedings until the appeal was argued before the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate on the basis of s. 32 of that Act considered that the Tahsildar had no jurisdiction to try the case and held his proceedings to be void and cancelled his order. The learned District Magistrate has entirely misunderstood s. 32 of the Village Panchayat Act which applies only to suits. The provision applicable to criminal cases is s. 31. It is urged that technically this order amounts to an acquittal and, therefore, this Court should not interfere in revision. This is just one of those cases in which the High Court is justified in interfering, the Appellate Court having wrongly considered that the whole of the proceedings in the Trial Court were without jurisdiction. I accordingly set aside the order of the District Magistrate and direct him to re-hear the appeal.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 725 OF 1924.

February 2, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

JEOBARAN SINGH AND OTHERS—

ACCUSED—PETITIONERS

versus

RAMKISHUN LAL—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bengal Ferries Act (I B C of 1885), ss 16, 28—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 234—Ferry, unauthorized, maintenance of—Carriage of passengers or property—Offence—Several offences, trial of—Procedure

Section 16 of the Bengal Ferries Act only makes the maintenance of a ferry within the prohibited area an unauthorized act but does not make such an act penal. Section 28 of the Act is, however, a penal provision which makes the maintenance of an unauthorized ferry under s. 16 of the Act an offence when the ferry is used for conveying a passenger, animal, vehicle or other thing for hire [p 872, col 1].

In order to constitute a ferry such as contemplated by the Bengal Ferries Act it is necessary that there should be two points on both sides of the river so that passengers and property may be conveyed from one side of the river to the other. It must be connected on both sides with land on the banks of the river [ibid].

The maintenance of a private ferry is in contravention of s. 16 of the Bengal Ferries Act for which the person who maintains the ferry may be liable for damages and an injunction may also be issued against him. If, however, in addition to maintaining such a prohibited private ferry, he carries passengers or property he is liable criminally under s. 28 of the Act and each time he conveys passengers or property for hire he commits an offence. Each trip is a separate transaction and can be tried separately. Where several trips are made within the course of a few days the proper procedure is for the Magistrate to try the accused at one time only in respect of three of these transactions and to use the remaining transactions as evidence in the case for the purpose of determining the amount of the damages payable under the Act. If a conviction is obtained in respect of transactions selected for trial, the Court should stay the enquiry into or trial of the other charges which will have the effect of the acquittal of the accused on those charges subject to the event of the conviction being set aside on appeal or revision. If the conviction is set aside the Magistrate may proceed with the trial of or enquiry into other charges. [p 872, col 2, p 873, col 1].

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 16th December 1924, upholding that of the City Magistrate, Patna City, dated the 2nd December 1924.

Messrs. P. C. Manuk, S. P. Verma and N. N. Sinha, for the Petitioners.

Sir Ali Imam (Assistant Government Advocate) and Girindra Nath Mukharji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners have been summoned to stand on their trial with respect to 24 complaints filed against them on behalf of a ferry contractor Chandraketu Singh by his servant Ramkishun Lal in the Court of the City Magistrate of Patna under s. 16/28 of the Ferries Act (Act I of 1885).

The case of the complainant in short is that the petitioners were conveying passengers, etc., for hire in contravention of the provisions of s. 16 of the Ferries Act by maintaining a ferry between the 9th and 12th November 1924. There are 24 complaints arising out of as many trips from Marufgunj in Patna City across the river Ganges to Sabalpur Diara in the Saran District.

The petitioners' main objection is that all these 24 trips do not constitute as many separate offences under the aforesaid section, but that they together constitute one offence and, therefore, they should be tried at one trial with respect to all these trips. Mr. Manuk on behalf of the petitioners contends that in order to sustain a charge under s. 28 it is essential to show in the first instance that the petitioners maintained a ferry to or from any point within a distance of two miles from the limits of a public ferry which is prohibited by s. 16 of the Act.

That section only makes the maintaining of a ferry within the prohibited degrees an unauthorized act but it is not in itself penal. It may give rise to an action for damages, but is not punishable under the criminal law. Section 28 is a penal provision which makes the maintenance of an unauthorized ferry under s. 16 an offence when the ferry is used for conveying any passenger, animal, vehicle or other thing for hire. Accordingly, it is contended that the ferry in question was used for four days, namely, from 9th to 12th November, during the Sonapur fair, for the purpose of carrying passengers, etc., for hire and thus the ferry was maintained for the aforesaid four days for the purpose of making profit by realising tolls from passengers. The act of realising tolls during the four days must be deemed to be one continuous act as implying the maintaining the ferry under s. 16 of the Act. Therefore, each time the toll was realised during those four days would not constitute a separate transaction and would not form the subject of a separate charge or trial against the petitioners.

The word 'ferry' has not been defined in the Act. Section 5 simply says—

"'ferry' includes a bridge of boats, pontoons or rafts, a swing-bridge, a flying bridge, a temporary bridge, and a landing stage".

The word must, therefore, be taken in its ordinary accepted legal significance. Literally it has been defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary as "a liberty to have a boat upon a river for the transportation of men, horses, and carriages with their contents, for a reasonable toll. The term is used also to designate the place where such liberty is exercised. In law it is treated as a franchise and defined as the exclusive right to carry passengers across a river, or arm of the sea, from one vill to another, or to connect a continuous line of road leading from one township or vill to another". Continuing the dictionary says "In a strict sense a ferry is a continuation of a highway from one side of the water to the other and is for the transportation of passengers, vehicles and other property". In order to constitute a ferry such as is contemplated by the Act in this country it is necessary that there should be two points on both sides of the river so that people and property may be conveyed from one side of the river across the other. It must be connected on both sides with land on the bank of the river. In order to give full significance to this meaning of the term the Act has included in it "any other appliance by which the water is connected with the land". This purpose may be served by a bridge of boats, pontoons or rafts, etc. In this sense the public ferry is created and leased on behalf of the authorities, and to protect the rights granted under the lease with respect to a public ferry the Act has made it illegal to maintain a regular ferry on a river within two miles of a public ferry so as not to interfere with or affect the peaceful working of and making profit out of the public ferry leased to the contractor. It seems that the idea is similar to that in England where, the aforesaid dictionary notes, "ferries are established by royal grant or by prescription, which is an implied grant in the United States, by Legislative Authority, exercised either directly or by a delegation of powers to Courts, Commissioners, or Municipalities." Wherever such public ferries have been created provision has always been made to protect the interest of the public ferry by forbidding individuals erecting a competition ferry near about. One provision referred to in the dictionary is "if an individual, without authority from the State, erect a new ferry so near an older ferry, lawfully established, as to draw away the custom of the latter, such individual will be liable to an action on the case for damages, or to a suit in equity for an injunction in favour of the owner of the latter." This seems to have been the object with which s. 16 has been enacted. The maintenance, if any, of a private ferry by the petitioners was in contravention of s. 16 of the Act for which they may be liable for damages and also an injunction may issue against them. If, in addition to maintaining such a prohibited private ferry, they carried passengers and property for hire they are liable criminally under s. 28 of the Act, and each time they did convey for hire they became liable.

It seems that each trip was a separate transaction and can be tried separately. The question, however, is whether the petitioners should be tried simultaneously for all the offences committed by them between the 9th and the 12th November 1924.

The offences were committed within a space of one year and the principles underlying ss. 234 and 240 of the Cr. P. C. may usefully be availed of. The Magistrate should try at one time only three of these transactions and use the remaining transactions as evidence in the case for the purpose of determining the amount of punishment and damages payable under the Ferries Act. If conviction is obtained on such a trial, the Court should stay the inquiry into or trial of the other charges which will have the effect of an acquittal of the accused on those charges subject to the event of the conviction being set aside by higher authorities. If the conviction is set aside the Magistrate may proceed with the trial or inquiry of the other charges.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 167

COMPLAINANT—RESPONDENT.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), s. 249, Sch V, cl (q)—“Machinery”, meaning of—Collection of handlooms, whether machinery

The “machinery” contemplated by Sch V, cl (q) of the Madras District Municipalities Act is machinery worked by power such as steam, water, or electrical power, and the word must be confined to such forms of machinery as may reasonably be held to be in the same category as combustibles, and unwholesome or dangerous trades

Machinery worked by hand such as handlooms or sewing machines is excluded from the scope of s. 249 of the Act.

A collection of maggoms is not “machinery” within the meaning of Sch V, cl (q) of the Act and no license is, therefore, required to be taken under s. 249 of the Act for using the same.

Petition, under ss. 435 and 437 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Bench of Magistrates, dated the 10th February 1925, in S. T. No. 1 of 1925.

Sir K. V. Reddi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. N. Govindan, for the Respondent.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—Petitioner seeks to revise the finding and sentence of the Bench Court, Cunnanore, fining him Rs. 10 for failure to take out a license under s. 249, Act V of 1920.

It is admitted that petitioner has a weaving factory containing nine looms of the sort which the weaver works with his hands and feet, known as a maggom or European loom. The Bench has found that he was liable to take out a license for using for an “industrial purpose” machinery as provided in sub-cl. (q) of Sch. V, Act V, 1920. The question for determination is whether those looms are machinery within the mischief of the Act.

The learned Public Prosecutor argues that the sub-cl. (q) covers anything which is likely to be dangerous to human life, or health or property, and any machinery used for an industrial purpose which is thus dangerous requires a license. On this interpretation of the clause, the word ‘machinery’ would be otiose. So long as the industrial process were dangerous, it would not matter whether it was performed by hand, instrument or machine; it would still have to be licensed. Something more than a mere dangerous process is evidently intended by “machinery” but the question is within what limits the word is employed. It cannot have been intended that anything which is commonly called a machine must be licensed. For instance, no one has ever supposed that singer’s sewing machines required license, and the literary sense of the word is too general to afford any guidance. In old English, machine was synonymous with universe, and when Hamlet concludes his letter to Ophelia, “Thine ever more most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him”, he treats the word as the equivalent of body. For a long time machine was used as another word for vehicle, a meaning which survives in “bathing machine”, and is still, I gather from the Public Prosecutor, prevalent in the more remote parts of the British Isles, and although such general sense are long obsolete and the term is now confined to some sort of apparatus for applying mechanical power, it has within those limits a very wide application. Not only a handloom but any hand instrument which involves more than one simple mechanical principle is a machine. For instance, though a hammer may be called an instrument, a nail extractor is a machine and a hand ginning apparatus is a machine. Thus even in its ordinary sense “machine” would seem to have a wider connotation than the clause intends. The Statute itself affords no assistance by way of definition; but I observe that s. 250 refers to mechanical power and I think that this points to the right interpretation. As observed by Professor Murray in the Oxford Dictionary in recent use, the word tends to be applied especially to an apparatus so devised that the result of its operation is not dependent on the strength or manipulative skill of the workman. In other words an apparatus driven by other than human and, I would add, animal power; I think that the machinery contemplated in the Act is machinery worked by power such as steam, water, or electrical power; and machinery worked by hand such as handlooms, or sewing machines is excluded. This, of course, is the limited sense in which machinery was understood at the time of the Luddite and similar riots. No doubt this is an arbitrary decision, and it would be better if the Statute contained its own definition, but it is the only definition which, after a careful consideration of the matter, seems to afford the licensing officer a clear criterion, and also to confine "machinery" in cl. (g) to such forms of machinery as may reasonably be held to be in the same category as combustibles, and unwholesome or dangerous trades.

I find that a collection of maggoms is not machinery under Sch. V (q). The petition is allowed and the conviction set aside. The fine should be refunded.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 15 OF 1925.

March 19, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir John Bucknill, Kt., and Mr. Justice Macpherson.

BADRI CHOUDHRY AND OTHERS—

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 162, 172—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 167—Statement made to Police, whether can be used at trial—Procedure—Improper admission of evidence, effect of.

A statement made by a witness during Police investigation can only be used to assist the accused by showing that the witness who in Court deposes to certain facts has in his statement before the Police given an account or made statements which are contradictory to the testimony which he gives in Court. The statement made to the Police cannot be used at large for the purpose of showing that the statement does not corroborate or assist the story as put forward in the First Information Report [p. 877, col. 2.]

The limitations under which such a statement can be used are very strict. The statement of a prosecution witness alone can be used at the trial and only if it has been reduced to writing and only that part of it can be used which is in contradiction of the evidence of the witness given in Court provided it is duly proved and the attention of the witness has been drawn to it. A statement made to the Police which does not contradict the testimony of the witness given in Court cannot be proved in any circumstances, and it is not permissible to use the recorded statement as a whole to show that the witness did not say something to the investigating officer [p. 880, col. 2; p. 881, col. 1.]

Under s. 167 of the Evidence Act the improper admission of evidence is not of itself a ground for a new trial or reversal of a decision in a case, if it appears to the Court that independently of that evidence there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision. [p. 881, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from a decision of the Sessions Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 19th January 1925.

Messrs. K. B. Dutt, S. P. Varma and L. K. Jha, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Bucknill, J.—This was an appeal made to this Court by eight persons who were convicted on the 19th January last by the Sessions Judge of Darbhanga of various offences and were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. When the application for the admission of this appeal came before this Court before Mr. Justice Mullick and myself we ordered that, although the appeal should be heard, the appellants should be directed to show cause why their sentences should not be enhanced. This was on the 21st January last.

Originally 16 persons stood their trial; but, of these, eight were acquitted, the learned Sessions Judge thinking that he was not altogether satisfied that the participation by those eight persons in what had taken place had been fully and conclusively substantiated. The present appellant No. 3, Tirpit Choudhry, is regarded as the principal leader in the affair. He was convicted, first of all, under the provisions of s. 148 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 50 thereunder and, secondly, of an offence under the joint provisions of ss. 325 and 149, Indian Penal Code, and thereunder he was sentenced to eight months' rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 50. The sentences of imprisonment were to run concurrently. The 2nd and the 4th appellants, Kishori Choudhry and Palat Choudhry, were convicted also under the same sections as was appellant No. 3; but in their case the sentences of imprisonment were six months in respect of each offence and a fine of Rs. 25 in respect of the conviction under the provisions of s. 148. The other five appellants were only convicted of offences against the provisions of s. 147 and the combined provisions of ss. 325 and 149, Indian Penal Code, and they were each sentenced thereunder to three months' rigorous imprisonment such terms of imprisonment being as in the other cases ordered to run concurrently. They were all also bound over under s. 106, Cr. P. C., to keep the peace for one year.

Now, the charges upon which these appellants were convicted were altogether three in number. The first was that they were members of an unlawful assembly the common object of which was the forcible taking of the ploughs of one Sheikh Mazhar and begari (that is to say, forced labour without making any payment) from him; and that in prosecution of the common object the appellant had used physical force. This was, of course, the charge under s. 147, Indian Penal Code. The second charge was that being members of the unlawful assembly and actuated with the common object as detailed in the previous charge some member or members of the assembly had committed the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt under the provisions of s. 325. They were accordingly charged under the joint provisions of ss. 149 and 325 on the ground that they knew that such an offence was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly. The three persons who were convicted under s. 148 were charged with having committed the rioting whilst armed with deadly weapons.

Now the circumstances under which this occurrence is alleged to have taken place were very simple. It is said that on the 4th August last the third appellant, who is the eldest son of a man named Sinalal Choudhry, went to the village where Sheikh Mazhar, who has already been mentioned, was a resident and there demanded begari from him. Sheikh Mazhar, who was the headman of his folk in that village refused flatly saying that he had never done begari work and did not intend to do so for any malik. It is stated that on this refusal the 3rd appellant then left the place threatening Sheikh Mazhar. On the following morning Sheikh Mazhar is said to have gone to his field for the purpose of ploughing, taking with him his plough and bullocks. Close by to where he was ploughing were his two brothers Sheikh Jero (P. W. No. 1) and Sheikh Latif (P. W. No. 5) who were working in a field not far away. It is alleged that the 3rd appellant's father Sinalal (who was one of the accused at the trial but who was acquitted) accompanied by the 2nd, 3rd and 4th appellants then came up to Sheikh Mazhar and demanded that he should give free labour and allow his plough and bullocks to be utilised therefor. Sheikh Mazhar, however, refused to agree and in consequence he was then attacked by the three appellants whom I have mentioned together with a large number of other persons, the number of persons in the mob is variously estimated as from 15 to 80 persons. The 2nd appellant is said to have struck Sheikh Mazhar with a spear; the 4th appellant is said to have hit him on the right arm with a ganrasa and the 3rd appellant to have struck him on the right heel with a ganrasa. His two brothers Jero and Latif came to help him but they were also knocked about and another man Sheikh Banwali who had also tried to assist them was similarly assaulted. Sheikh Mazhar sustained some serious wounds. His right heel was apparently almost cut off; he had also a compound fracture of the right ulna bone and, in addition, an incised wound 2 inches by  $\frac{1}{4}$  inch and skin deep on his right arm. He was taken to the hospital and treated and, although no doubt it could not have been expected in the ordinary course that the wound which he received would prove fatal, he unfortunately contracted lock-jaw and died about 15 days after he had been admitted into the infirmary. The other injured men did not sustain severe wounds. On the deceased's brother Jero were some bruises and he also sustained a fracture of a finger bone of the left hand; on the deceased's brother Latif were some cuts on the forehead and neck whilst on Sheikh Banwali were bruises and a laceration exposing the bone on the parietal region.

The learned Judge was assisted by five Assessors. The first of these thought that the charges against the appellants had been proved; that out of the 16 persons originally accused 14 were guilty, he excepting only two of the accused, namely, Sinalal the father of the 3rd appellant here and one Bachi Choudhry, both of whom were men of over middle age. The other four Assessors did not think that the common object which was the basis of the charges had really been satisfactorily made out. They were doubtful whether the reason which was given by the prosecution for the assault was a true one and they seem to have been under the impression that the quarrel had taken place about two plots of land which had a long time ago been the property of the deceased but which had subsequently passed into the possession of the third appellant's father. They were also doubtful as to who had inflicted the injuries on the deceased and on his brother Jero and appear to have considered that it was possible, or indeed probable, that the assailants had inflicted whatever injuries were inflicted in exercise of some right of private defence. The learned Judge, however, has not taken that view. He has come to the conclusion, and I think rightly, that the story which was told by the prosecution was substantially true; that the real reason, or at any rate the main reason, for the assault was the refusal by the deceased to agree to give forced labour to the 3rd appellant's father; and he has, therefore, disagreeing with four of the Assessors and agreeing with one, come to the conclusions to which I have already drawn attention and has passed the sentences which I have already detailed.

Now, the learned Counsel who has appeared for the appellants has said himself that he was in some difficulty in defining the points upon which he could ask this Court to come to a conclusion different to that which has been arrived at by the Sessions Judge. It is true that it is difficult to find any good reason which would justify this Court in saying that the learned Judge was wrong; for there were circumstances which undoubtedly tended to indicate that the deceased was by no means on good terms with what I may call the Choudhry party as particularly represented by the 3rd appellant and his father. There is indeed evidence to show that the deceased had borrowed money from the 3rd appellant; that the 3rd appellant had in May last year instituted a suit for recovery of the sum which had been borrowed from him by the deceased and that the deceased had taken, what I may call, the opportunity of entering a written statement in which he flatly declared that the hand note upon which the 3rd appellant was basing his claim was a forgery. The hearing of that case was indeed to have started on the 1st August last, that is to say, a few days before this unfortunate affair took place. It was, however, adjourned until the 18th August by which time the deceased had contracted tetanus and was on his death bed.

Now, the learned Counsel has as his first point strenuously suggested that the story which was put forward by the prosecution as the occasion and cause of the wounding of the deceased, his brothers, and Sheikh Banwali was not true. He has pointed out that there is a substantial difference between important features in the First Information Report which was laid by the deceased man on the 5th August at the Bahera Police Station and a statement which he subsequently made before a Magistrate on the 14th August when it was seen that his condition of health owing to his having contracted lock-jaw was such that it was probable that he would not recover. The principal feature of difference to which very prominent attention has been drawn by the learned Counsel for the appellants is that in the First Information the deceased man undoubtedly states that on the 4th August it was the 3rd appellant Tirpit who had demanded forced labour from him and upon his refusal had threatened him with serious consequences on the following day. In the statement made by the deceased on the 14th August, it will be seen that the deceased man says that the occurrence on the 4th August was between himself and the father of the 3rd appellant, namely, Sinalal Choudhry. The learned Sessions Judge evidently either thinks that there has been some mistake or pays little attention to this discrepancy. I think it is undoubtedly a peculiar matter and it is certainly remarkable that the deceased should have in the first instance spoken of the son, (that is to say, the 3rd appellant) as having had words with him on the 4th August, and in the second instance that he should have spoken of the father. There is, however, this to be said that there is no doubt that in the First Information the deceased man speaks of the "malik resident" whilst in the statement which he made on the 14th August, he merely mentioned the name of Sinalal, the father of the man Tirpit Choudhry, the 3rd appellant, whom, however, he did mention by name in the First Information. I do not pretend to explain how this difference arose but at any rate there can be no doubt that the 3rd appellant's father had only quite recently become the malik of the deceased man who was one of his rai-yats.

The learned Counsel has also referred to a somewhat remarkable statement which appears to have been made by one Genwa Dusadh a chaukidar on the 5th August at the Police Station at about 3 p. m. It is not quite clear whether the chaukidar, at the time he gave the information, was aware that something of the nature of a disturbance had already taken place. But what was taken down in the station diary at the Bahera Police Station was to the effect that this chaukidar had arrived and reported that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace between Sheikh Mazhar and Sheikh Latif on one side and Sinalal Choudhry and others on the other side in connection with lands. The learned Counsel has persistently suggested that it was really a dispute about land and not about begari which had led up to the affray and he based, in the first instance, one of his arguments in this direction upon what he thought was the fact that although a number of persons had accompanied the deceased man to the thana when he gave the First Information, yet no person other than the deceased had given the names of any of those who were said to have attacked him. He, therefore, suggested that at that time these persons, such as for instance Jero and Latif, the brothers of the deceased, who undoubtedly were both injured and were certainly present at the occurrence, did not know who had attacked their brother the deceased and subsequently concocted the story which has resulted in the conviction of the present appellants. The learned Sessions Judge does not appear, so far as I can gather, to have examined carefully what these persons did actually say to the Head Constable who took down the First Information given by the deceased. However, in this Court we had this document examined and it is found that the contention which was put forward by the learned Counsel for the appellants could not be substantiated, for it is quite clear that those persons who were examined by the Head Constable and who purported to be eye-witnesses did in fact corroborate what had been said by the deceased in his First Information. This argument, therefore, that owing to the lack of corroborative evidence at an early stage of the proceedings little, if any, value can be attached to the First Information itself, falls to the ground.

But, it is, I think, at this stage not unimportant to draw attention to the somewhat free use which appears to have been made of these statements to the Police Officer. It is said that according to the recently amended provisions of the Cr. P. C. documents of this character can only be used to assist the accused in particular by showing that a witness who in Court deposed to certain facts has in such a statement at an earlier stage given an account or made statements which are contradictory to the testimony which he gives in Court. Here, in this case, these statements made to the Police appear to have been used in cross-examining the witnesses not merely to show contradictions but at large; and they have been referred to in this Court again at large not merely with the idea of contradicting the witnesses' evidence but rather for the purpose of showing that the statements did not corroborate or assist the story as put forward in the First Information Report 1, therefore, must observe that it was only when this suggestion that these statements could thus be utilized as a serious attack upon the truth of the First Information was made that I thought it desirable that what had actually been stated to the Police Officer should be seen and scrutinised; and it was, as I have said, then ascertained that the contention which was being put forward was not in fact correct. I am not, however, satisfied that the use which was sought to be made of these statements, both at the trial and in this Court, was justified by the present provisions of the Cr. P. C. The matter, however, need not be pursued here further; because although it is suggested, now somewhat naively, that this Court should not perhaps have examined these documents for the purpose of scrutinising them in order to see if the argument put forward by the learned Counsel for the appellants was sustainable, yet I can only point out that the examination of these statements by this Court was really rendered necessary by the argument of the learned Counsel for the appellants; an argument which perhaps should not have been listened to. Now, although that point put forward by the learned Counsel who has appeared for the appellants has thus failed, he has further contended that it is extremely unlikely on other grounds that the attack could have arisen on account of the refusal of the deceased to agree to give begari to the appellants' party. He suggests that, in view of the fact that there was already litigation between the 3rd appellant and the deceased in which the deceased had accused the 3rd appellant of basing a claim upon a hand-note which was forged, it was extremely unlikely that any demand would be made at such a juncture against the deceased to perform any forced labour for his new malik. I do not, however, think that this argument is one which is at all convincing although it is no doubt ingenious. The provocative attitude, adopted with regard to the suit instituted against him for money alleged to have been lent by the 3rd appellant to the deceased, may well have inflamed the 3rd appellant very considerably against the deceased and made him determined that any right or supposed right or even shadow of right which he might have against the deceased he would in no way dispense with. It seems to me that this litigation which existed between the 3rd appellant and the deceased might in itself indeed be one of the features which moved the 3rd appellant and his friends to attack the deceased and to make as an excuse before attacking him an insistence upon the demand for forced labour.

The learned Counsel as a third point has skilfully developed a somewhat remote but simple story relative to the changes of ownership of certain lands from the hands of the deceased party into the hands of the appellants' party and with this history he has coupled a claim, which was undoubtedly made in Court and at this trial, by the deceased's two brothers, Jero and Latif, to be in possession still of a certain portion of this property to which I have made reference; and he suggests, and I must admit with a certain amount of force, that under these circumstances it is possible and indeed probable that what took place did take place on account of a squabble over this land and not on account of any begari claim. In order to understand this argument, which has certainly some merit, it is necessary to explain that a long time ago in 1903 there were two plots of land in this Mouza Nos. 492 and 573. These pieces of lands were not contiguous but were not very far away from each other. These two plots at one time had been given in batai to one Kari Dhanuk and he had been in possession of both plots for a considerable time. The plots of land had originally belonged to the deceased and his brothers and he, that is, the deceased, had, whilst his brothers, Jero and Latif, were still minors, sold them. Jero and Latif being now adults, that is to say, having attained their majority are, it is suggested, endeavouring to try and get possession of these two plots of land which were sold when they were minors by their brother. The position of the two brothers, Jero and Latif, appears to be that in the course of their evidence they stated that they were still in possession of plot No. 573 although they did not claim in any way to be interested in the other plot 492. The learned Sessions Judge has undoubtedly come to the conclusion that Latif and Jero are not telling the truth when they say that they are in possession of plot No. 573; and the learned Counsel for the appellants has urged that the two brothers Jero and Latif, although claiming now to be still in possession of plot No. 573, are clever enough in the present circumstances not to claim any right to be also in possession of plot No. 492 upon or near which it is alleged that this attack upon the deceased took place; because they know that if they did lay claim on their own or their brother's part to possession of this plot No. 492, a presumption might at once arise against their story that the occurrence had taken place on account of a claim against their brother (and perhaps themselves) for begari. The learned Counsel has also stated that in April 1924 Sinalal, that is the father of the 3rd appellant, had acquired some property which had been given in usufructuary mortgage to one Ram Kishun Jha. This consisted of Touzi No. 3390. There is no doubt that the 3rd appellant's father had purchased this usufructuary mortgage and that on this piece of land the deceased was one of the *raiya*ts. It was suggested, although not very seriously, that the dispossessed usufructuary mortgagee-in-possession Ram Kishun Jha had endeavoured to cause all or some of the accused to be implicated by the deceased in the attack upon himself or in the fight which it is suggested by the learned Counsel for the appellants was what actually took place. Now the learned Counsel has asked the pertinent question as to what was the reason for introducing the story which was told by the two brothers of the deceased with regard to their claim to be in possession of this plot No. 573 with which plot undoubtedly had at one time been associated plot No. 492 upon or near which the attack upon the deceased is said to have taken place? The learned Counsel suggests that the real truth of the matter probably is that there was indeed a dispute about land and not only about this plot (plot No. 573) but also about the plot with similar characteristics (plot No. 492) and that the view of the case which has been taken by the four Assessors with regard to the real cause of the affray having been a dispute about land and not about begari should have been accepted by the learned Judge. It is also contended that in his evidence before the Magistrate the Sub-Inspector of Police is stated to have testified that according to his investigations he became under the impression that the dispute really had been about land. This piece of evidence or rather the fact that this Sub-Inspector had at one time come to this conclusion has been stated to us in this Court; but it does not appear from the record to have been so stated before the learned Judge nor does the attention of the Sub-Inspector himself appear to have been drawn to it in cross examination. The learned Counsel further states that the Vakil who was appearing in the Court below at the trial did propose to ask the Sub-Inspector a question upon this point, but that the Sessions Judge disallowed the question. It is difficult to see why he should have disallowed it and there is certainly no record, so far as I can see in the papers before us, which would show that any such question was proposed to be asked or disallowed at all. Under such circumstances it is difficult to say that the fact that the Sub-Inspector came to this conclusion should have had any effect upon the mind of the Court and indeed I would go further and say that the view which the Sub-Inspector had expressed (if indeed he did so) is only a matter of opinion which in itself is not of much evidential value. The learned Counsel for the appellants has also suggested that if this affray arose merely out of the claim of begari it is hardly credible to suppose that the 3rd appellant was accompanied by a huge mob as supporters nor that such a force was necessary to overawe the recalcitrant raiya. He urges that the story in its main features, namely, that a large mob of persons more or less armed came upon this land in the manner which is detailed is much more consonant with a free fight and with the chaukidar's story given at the Police Station at Bahera at 3 P. M. of the occurrence than with a mere attempt to take away the plough and a couple of oxen from the deceased Sheikh Mazhar.

There is a good deal to be said for this contention and the learned Counsel has sought to increase the impression which his arguments have brought to my mind by reading a good deal of the evidence. It is impossible, however, I think, to arrive at a conclusion which is different to that to which the learned Judge has come unless one is prepared to throw aside and declare as untrue a very large body of evidence which bears very forcibly upon the guilt of the appellants. The learned Counsel has suggested that, because the learned Judge thought that half of the original 16 accused persons should be acquitted, therefore, the evidence against the other eight, being substantially the same, they too should have been likewise acquitted. But I do not think that upon examination this argument, which is in the nature of a legal argument, and which might, if the facts were as stated, be a good argument, can be supported. It seems to me that if one looks at the evidence carefully and the learned Judge's reasons why he has thought that eight of the original accused should not be convicted and eight of the original accused, that is, the appellants before us, should be convicted, it is quite easy to see that the evidence against the different individuals is not altogether identical. Under these circumstances I have come to the conclusion that it is impossible for this Court to be moved by the arguments of the learned Counsel for the appellants in such a manner as to say that the convictions of these appellants are incorrect. I think that the case was tried with considerable care and that the judgment of the learned Judge disposed of the whole case satisfactorily and well.

There remains then the question of enhancement of the sentence. With regard to the five appellants who have been convicted under s. 147 and the combined provisions of ss. 325 and 149, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment, I do not see any ground for interfering with their sentence. But with regard to the three other appellants, that is to say, appellant No. 2, Kishori Choudhry, appellant No. 3, Tirpit Choudhry, and appellant No. 4, Palat Choudhry, the circumstances are somewhat different. The reason why distinction was drawn between these three appellants and the other five was in the first instance because they were charged under s. 148 and were armed with spears and other deadly weapons. The reason why in the second instance the case of the 3rd appellant was differentiated from those of the 2nd and 4th appellants Kishori and Palat was because he (Tirpit) was admittedly the ring leader in the whole matter. He represented his old father who was a man of 60 years of age and was the protagonist throughout, and it is also noticeable that his animosity against the deceased was certainly based upon some stronger motive than that of the others. I do not think that the sentence which has been passed is adequate in the case of the 3rd appellant. We think that the sentence passed upon him under the combined provisions of ss. 325 and 149, Indian Penal Code, should be increased from eight months to sixteen months. In the case of the 2nd and the 4th appellants, Kishori Choudhry and Palat Choudhry, we think that the sentences passed upon them under the joint provisions of ss. 325 and 149, Indian Penal Code, are also inadequate and should be increased from six months to twelve months. Except for these enhancements of sentences we do not think that there should be any further alteration and the appeals should otherwise be dismissed.

Macpherson, J.—I agree that this appeal must be dismissed and that the sentences under s. 148, Indian Penal Code, are inadequate and fall to be enhanced as proposed.

I offer a few additional observations.

I agree generally with the careful judgment of the learned Sessions Judge except in two particulars. The first of these is the question of sentence; that has been fully dealt with in the judgment just delivered. The second is his interpretation of the new s. 162 of the Cr. P. C., and his admission in evidence of certain statements made to the Investigating Officer in the course of the investigation under Ch. XIV of that enactment.

The effect of the amending Act of 1925 which is very great, has not yet been fully appreciated by the subordinate Courts. Before that enactment came into operation, s. 162 merely enjoined that the written record of a statement [not covered by s. 32 (1) of the Indian Evidence Act] made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation under Ch. XIV should not be used as evidence. The proviso permitted the statement itself to be used in certain circumstances to impeach the credit of the maker when examined as a witness. The new Act has substituted a section which prohibits the use of any such statement [now covered by s. 32 (1) of the Indian Evidence Act 1872] or any record of it whether in a Police diary or otherwise or any part of such statement or record for any purpose (subject to subsequent provisions of the Code) at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made. The expression "for any purpose" is very important and there is no sound reason why it should not be given its full value. If the Legislature meant merely to prohibit the use of the writing as evidence there was no point in amending the section or substituting the present stringent sub-s. (1). It is not merely use as evidence of the statement or of the record thereof that is prohibited by sub-s. (1) but use of it for any purpose, unless such use comes within subsequent specific provisions of the Code in that regard. There is for all practical purposes no such provision except in the first proviso to sub-s. (1) and in sub-s. (2), for s. 162 governs also s. 172 (2). Sub s. (2) excludes from the operation of the prohibition cases covered by s. 32 (1) of the Evidence Act, which do not require consideration in this appeal.

The first proviso to s. 162 (1) makes an exception in favour of the accused but it is an exception most jealously circumscribed under the proviso itself. "Any part of such statement" which has been reduced to writing may in certain limited circumstances be used to contradict the witness who made it. The limitations are strict (1) only the statement of a prosecution witness can be used; and (2) only if it has been reduced to writing; (3) only a part of the statement recorded can be used; (4) such part must be duly proved; (5) it must be a contradiction of the evidence of the witness in Court; (6) it must be used as provided in s. 145 of the Indian Evidence Act, that is, it can only be used after the attention of the witness has been drawn to it or to those parts of it which it is intended to use for the purpose of contradiction, and there are others. Such a statement which does not contradict the testimony of the witness cannot be proved in any circumstances and it is not permissible to use the recorded statement as a whole to show that the witness did not say something to the investigating officer.

Unquestionably the new sub-section has greatly enhanced the difficulty of trials because it excludes much that was previously admissible as evidence on which the Courts were accustomed to rely. It is unfavourable to the prosecution and to a less, but still considerable, extent to the defence. Experience points to the conclusion that the Courts do apply the provisions against the prosecution but fail to do so against the defence. It is, however, not a sufficient ground for deviating from what is intended to be a rigid rule that such deviation will favour the accused. It is incumbent on Court loyally to observe the prohibition of the Legislature in all cases where it is applicable. The Legislature has employed firm language palpably intended to make a clean sweep of the use at a trial of any statement to the Police during the investigation not only in evidence but for any purpose not covered by subsequent provisions of the Code which provisions make but one exceedingly restricted exception. The danger of endeavouring to temper this provision in favour of the defence and to widen the exception is illustrated by the present case. In the cross-examination of the Head Constable, Bir Prasad, evidence has been admitted of statements to the witness of five prosecution witnesses who accompanied the deceased Sheikh Mazhar to the thana and who were examined by him at the outset of the Police investigation. Among them are several statements which are not admissible under the proviso to s. 162 (1) or otherwise. Upon them the learned Sessions Judge founded the remark in his judgment: "None of the other witnesses told him that night as to who were the assailants of Mazhar," which on the record of the trial could only have been arrived at by an inadmissible use of the record of the examination under s. 161. If the inadmissible evidence be eliminated from consideration, as it must be, there is no warrant in the record for the remark which indeed substantially misrepresents the position. Learned Counsel has urged that the question of re-trial should be considered because of the improper admission of such evidence. But under s. 167 of the Indian Evidence Act the improper admission of evidence is not of itself a ground for a new trial or reversal of a decision in a case, if it appears to the Court that independently of that evidence there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision. In the present instance the evidence improperly admitted was favourable to the appellants and the elimination thereof only makes more inevitable the decision against them. In reaching this conclusion no use of the Police diaries is made which is not warranted by s. 172 of the Cr. P. C. or in accordance with the views expressed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Dal Singh v. Emperor (1). The only use to which these diaries can be put is to aid the Court in an inquiry or trial. Learned Counsel is aware of the contents of the record of the examination of the witnesses under s. 161 and is unable to contend that a fuller utilisation of them in evidence within the limits of the law would at all improve the case for the appellants.

I only refer very briefly to the arguments as they have been fully discussed in the judgment just delivered. Learned Counsel asked for an acquittal in the first place and mainly on the contention that the common object set out in the charge, to wit, to take begari from Sheikh Mazhar had no foundation in fact, but was an invention. He urged that as the occurrence clearly took place within a short distance of plot No. 492 it must have arisen out of rival claims of the deceased Sheikh Mazhar and the appellants to that plot. In my opinion such is not the case. There is good evidence that the Chaudhuris, and in particular Tirpit the son of Sinalal Chaudhuri demanded begari from Sheikh Mazhar on the 4th August. Next day Tirpit certainly got together a mob early in the morning and instructed the chaukidar to give a mendacious report at the thana. There were several sources of ill feeling. Not the least was a Small Cause Court suit instituted by Tirpit against the deceased in which the latter filed a written statement stigmatising the handnote sued upon as a forgery and which had been adjourned on 1st August though defendant was ready. Then the younger brothers of deceased were contending that they were not bound by the sale by Sheikh Mazhar in 1903 during their minority of plots Nos. 492 and 573 to Kari Dhanuk, alleged to be the benamidar of Sinalal Chaudhuri. But the main cause of ill-feeling lay in the claim to begari which was not enforceable in a Court, but yet was very important to the Chaudhuris. Sinalal Chaudhuri is a new malik in Lilpur, and by his recent purchase Mazhar and other Musulmans of that village had become his *raiya*s. He owns a large area of zirat in his residential village of Ladiami and several other neighbouring villages. Though Sinalal has no zirat or any land in direct occupation in Lilpur he may well be believed to have been anxious to secure, in accordance with the usage (illegal though it is) of the country, begari from new *raiya*s who are not of high caste. The deceased Sheikh Mazhar was the sarghana of the Musulmans. It stands to reason that if Sinalal broke down the resistance of the headman, the others if not completely cowed, could be subdued without difficulty. There is, therefore, no inherent improbability in the common object set out in the charge though additional vigour may have been given to the animus of Tirpit by the other considerations mentioned. It was, I think, purely fortuitous that the occurrence took place not far from plot No. 492. It is palpable that that plot has been in possession of Kari Dhanuk since the sale in 1903 and throughout the trial Jero and Latif, brothers of deceased, have disclaimed any right to the plot, while plot Nos. 573, which they do claim, is far distant from the scene of occurrence and admittedly was not the source of the affray. To my mind the learned Sessions Judge is entirely correct in accepting the direct and positive evidence as to the occurrence and the occasion thereof which has been furnished by a large number of witnesses who, according to their perfectly credible story were in their own fields close to the place of occurrence and who have not been broken down in cross-examination. The case is one of a class in which the views of the Assessors are generally of little value and they in fact followed communal lines.

In my judgment all arguments on behalf of the appellants fail and the decision under appeal must be maintained, with the exception of the three sentences which must be enhanced as proposed by my learned brother.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—Security for good behaviour—Procedure—Inquiry—Duty of Magistrate.

In a case under s. 110, Cr. P. C., it is the duty of the Magistrate to hold an independent enquiry and not to bind over an accused person merely because he agrees to furnish security. [p. 883, col. 1]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Aligarh, dated the 3rd October 1925.

Mr. Sailanath Mukerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a criminal revision from an order dismissing an appeal in s. 110 case. The accused along with several other persons was tried under s. 110 of the Cr. P. C. After the evidence of a number of prosecution witnesses including Civil and Military Officers had been recorded, the accused was asked by the Magistrate why he should not be bound down. The reply of the accused was "I have no objection. I shall furnish security. I have never been convicted before. I shall produce no defence evidence. I have no witnesses." The Magistrate, however, examined more witnesses and did not take the statement to be a plea of guilty. He held on the evidence that a good case had been made out for an order under that section.

The accused appealed to the Sessions Judge. The learned Sessions Judge dealing with the case of this particular applicant remarked as follows:—"There is no force in the appeal of Ram Charan, Yadram and Bhabhuti inasmuch as all three of them expressed their willingness to furnish security for their good behaviour and produced no defence. This was tantamount to a plea of guilty after evidence of several witnesses had been recorded against the appellants. I dismiss the appeal of these three men."

It is apparent that the learned Judge having come to the conclusion that the statement of the accused persons amounted to a plea of guilty did not consider the appeal on its merits and did not examine the prosecution evidence and come to an independent conclusion of his own. The question raised in this revision is that the learned Judge was in error in treating the willingness of the accused to furnish security as amounting to a plea of guilty.

In cases arising under s. 107, Cr. P. C., it has been held time after number that the Magistrate should hold an independent enquiry and should not act on the mere readiness of the accused to furnish security. I may only refer to the cases of Mul Chand v. Emperor (1), Chander Shekhar v. Emperor (2) and Jagdat Tewari v. Emperor (3). In principle there is no distinction between trials under s. 107 and trials under s. 110. In either case it is the duty of the Magistrate to hold an enquiry of the offence and not to bind an accused person merely because he agrees to furnish security.

I find, however, that the Magistrate did hold an enquiry and did record evidence. All that has happened is that the appeal of the accused applicant has not been considered on its merits by the learned Sessions Judge. I cannot, therefore, interfere with the order of the Trying Magistrate but setting aside the order passed on appeal direct that the case be sent back to the Court of the learned Sessions Judge of Aligarh in order that it be restored to its original number on the file and be disposed of according to law.

The grant of a right of appeal against an order making a complaint under s. 476 of the Cr. P. If a prima facie case has been made out the Appellate Court ought not to interfere with the order of a lower Court making a complaint [p. 884, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Gaya, dated the 5th November 1924.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—On the 25th May 1923 the appellants Nos. 1 to 15 are alleged to have filed a petition before the Subordinate Judge of Gaya asking for certain reliefs under s. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. With that petition the appellants filed two documents: (1) a mukarrari deed of 1811 and (2) a usufructuary mortgage of 1833. It is alleged that both these documents were forgeries and that the appellants dishonestly used these documents as genuine knowing them to be forged. Twenty-one other persons also joined in the petition but it has now been decided that they are not to be prosecuted and they are not now before us.

It is alleged that in 1923 these appellants who claim as mukarraridars under a deed of 1811 executed a dar-mukarrari in favour of the appellant No 16, Musammam Nageshwar, and that she also joined in the application to redeem the usufructuary mortgage of 1833. She is a par danashin lady and has a husband and two sons who assisted her in getting the dar-mukarrari kabuliyat registered before the Registrar. When the application under s. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act came on for hearing, the alleged mortgagee, the proprietress of the 7-anna Tikari Raj stated that there was no mukarrari or dar-mukarrari or usufructuary mortgage encumbering the estate, and the Subordinate Judge accordingly declined to order the redemption of the zerpeshgi mortgage and dismissed the application.

Thereupon one of the servants of the proprietress applied to the Subordinate Judge for the prosecution of the 37 persons who were party to the petition of the 25th May 1923 and also of Musammam Nageshwar Koer's husband and her two sons. Thereupon certain proceedings followed into the history of which it is not necessary to enter; but the result was that the District Judge upon an application made by the Public Prosecutor of Gaya ordered the prosecution of the 37 persons who were party to the petition of 1923 as well as of the husband and two sons of Musammam Nageshwar Koer for offences under ss. 471 and 467, Indian Penal Code.

There was then an appeal to this Court and a Division Bench on the 18th June 1924* set aside the order of the District Judge and directed further inquiry as to the complicity of each accused.

That inquiry has been made and the learned Judge has revised his former order and has discharged all but the present appellants Nos. 1 to 19.

It is now urged that the learned Judge has made no inquiry at all and that he has not done what the Court required him to do.

It appears that the District Judge has discharged all the minor accused. As to seven others, he found that two had died and that five had not signed the vakalat-nama which was given to the Pleader who was instructed to file the two forged documents; and he has now made a complaint against the 19 appellants only. It is contended that further evidence is required to show that the appellants knew that the documents were forged and that they used them. There is certainly a prima facie case that the documents are forgeries; for the former Raja of Tikari, who is alleged to have given the mukarrari and also the Raja in favour of whom the usufructuary mortgage is alleged to have been executed, were not alive on the dates on which the documents were executed. As regards the adult mukarraridars, i.e., appellants Nos. 1 to 14, it is clear that the District Judge was of opinion that they knew that they had not a shadow of a title and that they filed or instigated the filing of the documents knowing that they were forged. In the circumstances he was justified in taking proceedings against them under s. 476, C. P. C. The law does not compel him to make a detailed inquiry and as he has considered the case of each of these appellants he has, in my opinion, complied with the orders of the Division Bench. The grant of a right of appeal has, in my opinion, not conferred any new right upon the accused and the extent of the preliminary inquiry is still left to the discretion of the Court. If a prima facie case has been made out the Appeal Court ought not to interfere. In this case the Court has made an inquiry as regards these 14 accused and has made a complaint to a First Class Magistrate in order that the Magistrate may follow the procedure of s. 202 or proceed otherwise according to law. The learned Judge evidently intended that the Magistrate, if satisfied that process should issue, should call upon the Public Prosecutor to produce his evidence before him and then either dispose of the case himself or commit it for trial.

We think, however, that some revision of the learned Judge's order is required as regards appellants Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19. Musammam Nageshwar Koer, appellant No. 16, being a pardanashin lady, cannot be expected to have had any knowledge of the nature of the documents or to have taken any part in filing them in Court and, therefore, we do not think that there is at this stage a sufficient prima facie case against her.

It also appears that appellant No. 15 is a minor and his name also should be excluded.

With regard to the appellant No. 17, who is the husband of Musammam Nageshwar Koer, and appellants Nos. 18 and 19, who are her two sons, the learned Judge does not state what evidence there is of their complicity. The learned Assistant Government Advocate has informed us that it is proposed to lay a charge of conspiracy against them under s. 120-B of the Indian Penal Code and also of abetment, but there is nothing on the record to indicate whether there is any prima facie evidence against them. An application has been shown to us which was made by the Public Prosecutor in the Court of the District Judge on the 11th of February 1924 asking the District Judge to examine certain witnesses and documents in order to connect appellants Nos. 17, 18 and 19 with the other accused. The learned Judge declined to take that evidence. The decision was unfortunate and as there has been also no further inquiry in regard to these accused since the Division Bench remanded the case, we direct that the inquiry before the Magistrate be confined for the present to petitioners Nos. 1 to 14. If the Public Prosecutor considers it necessary to proceed against appellants Nos. 17, 18 and 19, he is at liberty to make a fresh application to the District Judge who after making such further inquiry as he may consider necessary will decide whether or not their case also should be referred under s. 476 to the Magistrate for trial along with the other petitioner.

Bucknill, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—On the 22nd of May last the appellant Parmeshwar Lal laid an information before the Sub-Inspector of Police at Daltonganj charging one Munsaf Ram with having set fire to a hut belonging to the appellant's master Gajadhar Prasad with the intention of causing wrongful loss. The case was investigated and was found to be false. A complaint was then lodged by the Sub-Inspector in the Court of the Magistrate of Daltonganj against the appellant for an offence under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, with the result that the appellant was committed to the Court of Session and was convicted by the Sessions Judge of an offence under the latter part of s. 211, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for four years. One of the Assessors returned a verdict of guilty while the other three were of opinion that the case was doubtful.

The appellant lives in the Gaya District and his master Gajadhar Prasad who also resides in that district appears to have assisted the Rani of Deo who is the niece of one Thakurai Jagat Prasad Singh of Mouza Burhibir in the Palamau District in a litigation with her husband, the Raja of Deo. That litigation was eventually settled by the Raja's making over a property worth Rs. 5,000 per annum to the Rani and paying a sum of Rs. 10,000 in cash to Gajadhar Prasad. Subsequently Gajadhar Prasad lent money to Thakurai Jagat Prasad in a litigation with his brother Ramsunder and took from Jagat Prasad a zerpeshgi of a 2-anna 8-pies share in certain mouzas of which Burhibir was one. In consequence of Gajadhar Prasad's realising the rent of a 5 anna 4 pies share of the villages instead of 2-annas 8-pies share disputes arose between him and Jagat Prasad in or about September 1923 and Ramsunder having by this time settled his dispute with Jagat Prasad and joined Jagat Prasad in resisting Gajadhar, a complaint was lodged by one of the servants of Gajadhar against Ramsunder and his servants alleging that they were threatening a breach of the peace and requesting that action should be taken to bind them down. Munsaf Ram was one of the persons thus complained against. In consequence of that complaint the Sub-Inspector of Police at Daltonganj which is eight miles from Burhibir stationed constable Ramgulam Tewari at Burhibir to see that no breach of the peace took place between Gajadhar's men and Ramsunder's men. The constable who had taken up his residence in the village about ten days earlier states that on the day of the fire he cooked his food at an open chulha (fire place) near the hut in question and after pouring some water on the fire he went to rest in a Thakurbari (temple) of Jagat Prasad. About 3 P. M. a dust storm arose and immediately afterwards he saw the hut in flames, among others Munsaf Ram came to the place but the appellant Parmeshwar Lal was not in the village at all that day.

Prosecution witness Ram Lal Singh, a peon in the service of the Rani of Deo who was at the time residing with her uncle Jagat Prasad, had been sleeping in the hut after his mid day meal. He says that about 4 P. M. he got up and went to wash his face. Then came the dust storm and immediately afterwards he found that the hut was on fire. He suggests that the fire came from the embers in the open fire place where he had cooked his food and near which there was a quantity of jute sticks. He says that Munsaf Ram arrived after the hut was completely burnt out or about five minutes after the fire began, and that he assisted in extinguishing the fire in a neighbouring house, namely, that of Nanki Dusa-din, to which the fire had spread.

Ram Lal is corroborated by Jawadhan whose house is immediately east of the hut.

Surajnath Pathak, who is Jagat Prasad's priest and was in the Thakurbari about 30 paces to the west, Ramdhari Lohar, Jamal-uddin, the grandson of Jawadhan and Musammat Nanki also corroborate Ram Lal.

All these witnesses prove that Munsaf Ram did not set fire to the hut, came after the fire began and that he assisted in putting it out.

The witness Lalji proves that at the time of the fire Munsaf Ram was working with other coolies at a wall which was being built for his master Ramsunder Singh to the west of the hut and that on hearing shouts of fire Munsaf ran to the place, and that he returned about half an hour later. This witness states that the hut is some distance from where he was working and that he did not go to it.

In my opinion the learned Sessions Judge was right in holding that Munsaf did not set fire to the hut and that the appellant's information to the Police was maliciously false.

With regard to the ownership of the hut, the evidence is that it was built by the Rani's men with wood, straw and leaves taken from Jagat Prasad's jungle. At that time the Rani had already given Gajadhar Prasad the managership of her properties in the Gaya District and the prosecution witnesses seem to have looked upon the Rani's servants as Gajadhar's servants. It appears that after Gajadhar obtained the zerpeshgi from Jagat Prasad he appointed one Audh Behari as his Devan at Burhibir for making collections. About eight days before the fire the appellant Parmeshwar succeeded Audh Behari. The hut in question was built about two months before the fire. Gajadhar's own servants used at first to live in a tent, but after the hut was built Ram Lal Singh and Bulaki Singh two peons of the Rani, and Jhari Singh, the Tahsildar of Gajadhar used to sleep in it. Ram Lal says that he used at first to sleep in a room in Jagat Prasad's house which is to the west but owing to shortness of accommodation he came over to the newly built hut. He was paid by the Rani through her manager, Gajadhar Prasad, and it is clear from the evidence of the chaukidar, Faujdar, that the villagers made no distinction between the servants of Gajadhar and the servants of the Rani.

I think, therefore, that it is established that the hut was not the property of Gajadhar and in the circumstances it is difficult to see why Munsaf Ram, the servant of Ramsundar, should set fire to it.

In the First Information it is stated that the value of the hut was Rs. 25 and that the articles destroyed consisted of rice, dal, salt, clothes and aluminium pots worth Rs. 21. It is not stated to whom these properties belonged, but the evidence is that some of them belonged to Ram Lal Singh and the constable Ram Tewari. Jhari Singh, the Tahsildar, was at Daltonganj that day with his master Gajadhar Prasad who had come there from Gaya. Bulaki was also away and it does not appear that any property belonging to Gajadhar's own servants was in the hut. Parmeshwar certainly had nothing there. That this should have been so is natural for Parmeshwar was only appointed eight days before the fire and he had only paid one visit to Burhibir. I accept the statement of Ram Lal when he says that Parmeshwar came to Burhibir on Sunday the 30th Baisakh and went away on the next day and that the fire took place the following Wednesday. Parmeshwar Lal's statement that he was in the hut at the time of the fire is, in my opinion, wholly and intentionally false. I cannot accept his explanation that he could not leave the village immediately after the fire because there was nobody else to look after his master's interests. I do not think it is likely that he would have stayed in the village alone that night if this had been a real case of arson. Next, if Parmeshwar had himself seen Munsaf setting fire to the hut, I do not understand why on the following morning Ram Lal should have been ordered by Audh Behari to go to Daltonganj to inform Gajadhar Prasad. There would have been no necessity for Audh Behari to interfere. I am satisfied that Ram Lal was sent by Audh Behari and the chaukidar Faujdar by the constable and that at Daltonganj they had an interview with Gajadhar and Parmeshwar and that under Gajadhar's orders Parmeshwar went afterwards to the thana to lodge an information against Munsaf Ram.

It has been contended that the First Information contains details which it would not have been possible for Parmeshwar to give if he had not himself seen Munsaf in the act. I am not impressed by this argument. The story that Munsaf was running away and that Jagat Prasad was standing near the Thakurbari might easily have been invented by one who was not at the place of occurrence at all.

It is next contended that at most the information is a mistake of fact and does not amount to a false information within the meaning of s. 211, Indian Penal Code. If the appellant had said to the Police that he suspected Munsaf Ram and if he had not deliberately charged Munsaf Ram with having set fire to the hut, there might have been some substance in this plea, but here it is clear that the appellant's intention was not merely that the Police should follow up a clue but that the Police should put Munsaf Ram on his trial. It was clearly the appellant's intention to set the criminal law in motion against Munsaf Ram and to injure Ramsundar and Jagat Prasad.

Next it is contended that the case does not come within the latter part of s. 211. It is urged that a false information given to the Police is not a proceeding instituted on a false charge within the meaning of the second part of the section. In my opinion a charge laid before the Police is a criminal proceeding, and notwithstanding the authority of Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar (1), I think that the decision of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Karim Baksh v. Queen-Empress (2) contains a correct statement of the law.

Finally, there remains the question of sentence. Having regard to the fact that the hut was a very flimsy and temporary structure and that it was worth only Rs. 25 and that the total value of property destroyed was less than Rs. 50, a sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment seems to be unduly severe. There might have been a suspicion in the mind of Parmeshwar that Ram Sunder's men had had a hand in causing the fire and the false charge does not bear any indication of any deep laid plot. In the circumstances I think a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment will meet the ends of justice. The sentence is accordingly reduced.

Bucknill, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The two appellants have been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of 24-Parganahs in agreement with the verdict of the majority of the Jury under ss. 304 and 326, Indian Penal Code. The first accused was convicted under s. 304 and sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment. The second accused was found guilty under s. 326 and sentenced to undergo the same term of imprisonment. Various objections have been taken on the ground of misdirections in the learned Judge's charge to the Jury; but it is not necessary to consider them as we find ourselves constrained to order a re-trial on the ground that the provisions of s. 360, Cr. P. C., have not been complied with. An affidavit has been filed on behalf of the accused in which it is stated that the deposition of each of the prosecution witnesses was not read over or explained to him after it had been recorded and before the examination of the next witness was commenced; but that the depositions of the witnesses examined on the day were read over to them after the close of the day's proceedings. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer in order to be sure of the truth or otherwise of this allegation made a reference to the learned Sessions Judge and an affidavit sworn by one Atul Chandra Banerjee, Bench clerk of the Second Additional Sessions Judge of Alipore has been placed before us. The deponent states as follows: "I read over and explained the depositions of the witnesses in the presence and hearing of the accused at the end of the day when the examination of all the witnesses for the day was closed." It is, therefore, clear that the procedure that was followed was that the depositions of all the witnesses were read over to them at the close of the day. This, in our opinion, is not sufficient compliance with the provisions of s. 360, Cr. P. C. It has been held in the case of Hira Lal Ghose v. Emperor (1) that s. 360 is mandatory and its provisions must be strictly complied with. This view is based on the wording of the section itself and on the policy underlying it, namely, to protect the witness and also to safeguard the interest of the accused by affording to the witness as well as the accused an opportunity of finding any inaccuracy in the record of the deposition. In Dargahi v. Emperor (2) the same learned Judges who decided the case of Hira Lal Ghose v. Emperor (1) had to consider a similar question with regard to the provisions of the section. There the deposition of a witness was read over to him when another witness was being examined in Court. The learned Judges deprecated the procedure and were of opinion that it was not a strict compliance with the provisions of s. 360, Cr. P. C., and in expressing that opinion they made the following observation: "That clause provides that as the evidence of each witness is completed, it shall be read over before the examination of another witness is commenced." If it is once conceded that s. 360 is mandatory, it follows that its provisions must be strictly complied with. The section says that "as the evidence of each witness taken under s. 356 or s. 357 is completed, it shall be read over to him in the presence of the accused and etc." The plain meaning to my mind is that the deposition of a witness must be read to him as it is completed. The practice of reading over the depositions of all the witnesses examined on one day at the end of the day may commend itself as intended to save public time; but it is not in strict conformity with the requirements of the law; and, experience gained in this case shows that more public time will be wasted in the re trial of the case than what was saved by the procedure adopted. The practice of reading over depositions of several witnesses at one time may also defeat the object of the section as laid down in the case of Hira Lal Ghose v. Emperor (1). The accused or his lawyer may not remember the exact words used or the form of the answer given. It is, therefore, desirable that the provisions of s. 360, Cr. P. C., should be strictly observed and the evidence of each witness read over to him after it is completed before the evidence of another witness commences; and the reading over should not be postponed till all the witnesses are examined. In this view the trial before the Additional Sessions Judge must be held to be vitiated by this defect in the procedure.

The appeal accordingly succeeds, the conviction of and the sentences passed on the appellants are set aside and we direct that they be re-tried according to law. The appellants will remain in Jail until further order by the Trying Court.

Panton, J.—I agree that the conviction and sentence of the appellants must be set aside as this appears to me to be the inevitable result of the earlier decisions of this Court just quoted by my learned brother.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s 332—Police Act (V of 1861), s 34—Playing cards in street—Offence—Prohibition by constable—Discharge of duty

Playing cards in the street is no offence under s 31 of the Police Act and, therefore, a constable prohibiting people from doing so cannot be said to be acting in discharge of his duty.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Karnal, with his No 362-J of 26th July 1925.

FACTS.—The accused Tulsī and Mul Chand have been convicted by Sardar Ujagar Singh, Magistrate First Class, under s. 332, Indian Penal Code. It appears that the appellants were playing cards in the street in front of a shop when constable Ram Pershad prohibited them from doing so. The accused did not mind it and so there was scuffle between the accused and the three constables (P. Ws Nos. 1, 2 and 3.)

The accused, on conviction by Sardar Ujagar Singh exercising the powers of Magistrate of the First Class in the Rohtak District, was sentenced, by order dated 4th April 1925, under s. 332 of the Indian Penal Code, to pay a fine of Rs. 25 or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months each.

GROUND.—It is urged on behalf of the applicants that the constable was not authorised to prohibit them from playing cards in the street and so the assault (even if it was committed) does not fall within the meaning of s. 332, Indian Penal Code. I think this contention is right. Playing cards is not an offence and does not come within any of the eight clauses of s. 34 of the Police Act. So the act of the constable in prohibiting the men from playing cards was not in the discharge of his duty. As to who began the fight first I cannot believe that the applicants who are Banyas by caste and respectable shopkeepers of the Rohtak town could have dared to slap the constable first. In my opinion the conviction is not right. The proceedings are, therefore, forwarded for revision to the High Court with a recommendation that the conviction and sentences of the applicants be set aside and the fine, which has been paid, be refunded.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioners.

ORDER.—The learned Sessions Judge is right in his conclusion that the petitioner had not committed an offence by playing cards in the street. Nevertheless in my judgment the petitioners were not justified in assaulting the Police constable. I, therefore, alter the conviction to one under s. 323, Indian Penal Code, and reduce the fine in each case to Rs. 5. The fines, if paid, in excess of that amount will be refunded.

A security bond given in form No 42 of the Fifth Schedule to the Cr P C originally filed in a Court which has since ceased to exist, can also be enforced by its successor to which the other functions of the defunct Court have been transferred [p 890, col. 1.]

Where a Magistrate passes an order under s 123, Cr. P. C., directing an accused to give security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour for more than one year and allows him time to file a security by a fixed date, but the accused absconds on that date, the liability of the sureties who held themselves responsible for the accused's attendance in Court cannot be held to be terminated, because until it is known whether the accused can give the security or an order is passed referring the case for the final orders of the Sessions Judge it cannot be said that the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court have been terminated [ibid]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Meerut, dated the 24th March 1925.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision in a case in which sureties' bonds have been ordered to be forfeited under s. 514 of the Cr. P. C. Two points of law are raised:—

(1) That the bonds were given for attendance in the Court of the Cantonment Magistrate and that the liabilities of the sureties came to an end when the case was transferred to another Court.

(2) That on 22nd September, the Magistrate passed an order directing the accused in the case to give security for three years, but allowed him ten days' time up to 3rd October to file the security. It was on this latter date that he absconded. The applicant contends that his liability came to an end on 22nd September.

Owing to a change in the law the Court of the Cantonment Magistrate ceased to exist in March 1924; and it appears from the Magistrate's order that all cases from that Court were transferred to the Court of B. Jai Narain, Special Magistrate. In my opinion, the terms of the security bond given in Form No. 42 of the Fifth Schedule to the Cr. P. C. are wide enough to include the successor of the Court in which the case originally was. Any other view of the law would produce most inconvenient results, since if an accused were on bail when a case was transferred, it would in every case be necessary before transferring the case to order his arrest or to require him to give fresh sureties.

As regards the second point, the terms of the bond include not only an inquiry before the Magistrate but also dates fixed in the Sessions Court if the case goes to that Court. In this case, the Magistrate could order the accused to give security for three years, but if the security was not given it was not in his power finally to dispose of the case. Final orders under s. 123 of the Code could only be passed by the Sessions Judge. The Magistrate had power under s. 120 of the Code to postpone the date from which the security should take effect, i. e., to give the accused time within which to furnish it. Until it was seen whether the accused could give the security or an order would have to be passed referring the case for the final orders of the Sessions Judge, it cannot be said that the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court had finally terminated so as to put an end to the liability of the sureties who were responsible for the accused's attendance. I find, therefore, that the orders of the Courts below are correct, and I dismiss this application.

JUDGMENT.

Newbould, J.—Arshed Ali has been found guilty by the unanimous verdict of the Jury on the charge of abetment of murder. He has been sentenced by the Additional Sessions Judge of Backerganj to death under s. 302 read with s. 109 of the Indian Penal Code. Under s. 374 of the Cr. P. C. the proceedings have been submitted to this Court for confirmation and the accused has also preferred an appeal against his conviction.

The facts according to the case for the prosecution are as follows:—

Lalsom Bibi, the principal witness in this case, has lived as the wife of five men. To how many of them she was legally married is not clear, but her marriage to the appellant Arshed Ali who was the fourth of her so-called husbands was certainly bigamous as it took place during the lifetime of the third Abdul Hussain who had not divorced her. After living with the appellant for a few months she left him and went to live in her father's bari. She was then one month pregnant. In Magh last she went through a form of nika marriage with the deceased Sher Ali. This enraged Arshed Ali and twice in the months of Falgun and Chaitra Japed Ali who is Arshed Ali's dharma-bhai asked Lalsom to return to Arshed Ali and threatened her when she refused to do so. On the night of the 10th April (28th Chaitra)

Sher Ali, Lalsom and her three children were sleeping in her hut. At a little before midnight Lalsom woke up hearing the noise of a scuffle. She heard Javed Ali, whose voice she recognised, say "Let me go." She got up to light a lamp and then heard Arshed Ali saying "Javed Ali, is the deed done" By the light of the lamp she saw that Sher Ali's viscera were protruding from a wound in his stomach and another wound on the left side of his chest. Her cries brought several neighbours to the scene and both Sher Ali and Lalsom told them that they had recognised Javed Ali and Arshed Ali by their voices.

Sher Ali was taken by boat to Patuakhali, the Sub Divisional headquarter, where he arrived at about 11 A. M. He was taken to the hospital and there his statement was recorded by an Honorary Magistrate from 3-30 to 4-10 P. M. He said that he had been wounded by Javed Ali and Arshed Ali and that Javed Ali inflicted the wound with a dao. He also stated that he was wounded because he married Arshed Ali's wife. He died before sunset that afternoon. The doctor who held the post mortem examination found three incised wounds on the body, of which two were homicidal. In his opinion death was due to shock and hæmorrhage from these two wounds.

That Sher Ali was murdered on the night of the 10th April has been clearly proved. Whether the appellant before us was guilty of abetting this murder depends on the credibility of the evidence that he was recognised by his voice. Though the Jury have unanimously convicted him, this being a reference under s. 374, Cr. P. C., we must be satisfied that their finding of fact is justified by the evidence on the record. After full consideration we are compelled to hold that there are several points in the case which make it unsafe to rely on this evidence. We also find that there has been positive misdirection on one important piece of evidence in the case in addition to non-direction by reason of the learned Judge having omitted to draw the attention of the Jury to several points which throw doubt on the truth of the case for the prosecution.

In his charge to the Jury the learned Sessions Judge has said: "On Wednesday, the 27th Chaitra (9th April) Arshed Ali was seen in Kalagachia village which adjoins Kewalumia walking towards the bari of Javed Ali." But the evidence is that Arshed Ali was seen in the neighbourhood not on the Wednesday but on the Thursday afternoon. The fact of the case for the prosecution rests on a statement alleged to have been made by Sher Gazi and is supported by the evidence of his brother Mahomed Gazi who deposed that Sher Gazi said he had seen Arshed Ali on the previous afternoon. That the expression "the previous afternoon" cannot mean the afternoon of the previous day is clear from the statement of Lalsom Bibi in the First Information to the effect that her husband had told her in the afternoon of the day of occurrence that when he returned after noon of that day he saw Arshed Ali and Javed Ali. This is a very serious misdirection since it was proved by witnesses who were examined by the Court to test the accused's plea of alibi, that he was present at Patuakhali as an accused in a case which was the last heard on the 10th April. Though this might not have prevented him being present at the murder he could not possibly have been at Kalagachia at the time that Sher Ali said that he saw him.

The case against this accused depends solely on the recognition of his voice by Sher Ali and Lalsom Bibi. It is certainly suspicious that no mention of this fact was made to anyone outside the village before the 18th of April when Lalsom Bibi's first information was recorded. Though the chowkidar Adam Ali went to the Amtali Police Station the morning after the occurrence, nothing was recorded there. The explanation given is that it was thought that information would be taken at Patuakhali. We think it unlikely that no entry would have been made even in the station diary if the chowkidar had then asserted that the accused had been recognised by their voices at the time of occurrence. The statement of Sher Ali recorded by the Honorary Magistrate contains no mention of how Javed Ali and Arshed Ali were recognised, though both are named.

It is difficult to rely absolutely on the statements of the deceased and his wife since they are clearly untruthful on one important point, the period that elapsed between Lalsom Bibi leaving Arshed Ali and her marriage to Sher Ali. Lalsom Bibi's evidence is that she married Arshed Ali 4 years ago and after living with him 4 months she went to live at her father's house. Sher Ali stated to the Honorary Magistrate that she was at her father's bari for about 4 years. But the age of the child of which Lalsom Bibi says the accused is the father, is inconsistent with her having lived apart from the accused for as long as two years. If the accused had raised no objection to Lalsom Bibi leaving him for even two years there is no reason why he should have committed this murder. Whatever the truth may be we have no doubt that there was good reason to suspect the accused and that the true story of the illfeeling between the parties has been concealed.

There are other reasons besides the delay in informing the authorities which make us suspect the truth of the story of recognition, apart from the question as to how far such recognition can support the conviction. It is most improbable that when a murder is being committed the murderer's companion should call to him by name. This suggests that the actual words that may have been heard, have been altered to strengthen the case against Javed Ali who is absconding.

Lalsom Bibi's evidence is contradictory on some material points. She said she had no talk with her husband before he made the statement to the neighbours and that when she lit the lamp her husband was senseless and he came to after the neighbours came. Then in cross-examination she said: "It is a fact that before any neighbours came up my husband told me he recognised Javed Ali and Arshed Ali, he told me this while I was lighting the lamp." Also in her deposition she said that her husband said "o ma" before any statements were made by the assailants, but when questioned by a juror as to the order of events she places this cry of "o ma" last of all. The evidence of the neighbours who came afterwards is not free from discrepancies. It is noticeable that when Ibrahim called to the chowkidar he spoke of some one unknown having committed the murder though according to the evidence he had then heard the story of recognition. There are also important discrepancies as to whether Lalsom Bibi said anything that night. The deceased's brother's account of a conversation with the deceased is very significant. He says that the deceased gave three reasons for accusing Javed Ali and Arshed Ali, (i) that he had no other enemies, (ii) that he saw Arshed Ali in the afternoon, (iii) that he had recognised their voices.

We think that the real reason for the accusation of these men was the first and that the third reason on which the case now rests is as unreliable as the second has been proved to be.

For these reasons we must hold that the guilt of the accused Arshed Ali has not been proved. We refuse to confirm the sentence of death passed on him. We allow his appeal and set aside his conviction and sentence and acquit him of the charge on which he was tried and direct that he be released.

Mukerji, J.—I entirely agree. I only wish to add a few words as regards the identification test that was held in the course of the trial in this case. The matter, however, is not of much importance in the present case, inasmuch as the witness who was subjected to this test was for sometime the wife of the accused, who was sought to be identified. In any case it is not reasonable to expect that she would have failed to identify the accused. What happened in this case was this:—Lalsom Bibi was examined as a witness on behalf of the prosecution and after her examination was over with the permission of the accused and his Pleader the identification test of the accused's voice was held, the accused being mixed up with seven other men. The accused was actually numbered six on the file, and his voice was correctly identified by Lalsom Bibi as the 6th voice. Personally I have always entertained grave doubts as to the propriety of such a test being adopted during the trial. It makes no difference that in the present case it was held with the permission of the accused and his Pleader, for a request in the matter of this description is always very embarrassing to the defence. There is no warrant for this procedure in the Statute and it is likely to lend spurious weight to the testimony which should be available for the purposes of a criminal trial.

The effect of the addition of sub-s. (6) to s. 439, Cr. P. C., by Act XVIII of 1923, is that the High Court, when adjudicating upon an application for enhancement of sentence, is converted into a Court of Appeal against conviction and the accused is entitled to show that his conviction is unjustified [p 893, cols 1 & 2]

Mr. Cardon Noad, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Accused.

ORDER.—On the 15th August 1924, two boxes containing various articles of merchandise were consigned from Delhi to Rewari, and, when the consignment arrived at Rewari, the consignee Tej Ram represented to the Station Master that one of the boxes had been tampered with. Thereupon the latter asked Tej Ram to produce the original beejak (invoice) to enable him to give an "open delivery" of the consignment. The invoice Ex P. B. was accordingly produced by Tej Ram, and the goods were delivered to him. A list of the articles alleged to have been lost was prepared by the Station Master, and on the strength of that list the consignee made a claim for the recovery of their value. The Railway Authorities, however, considered the claim to be false, with the result that Tej Ram was prosecuted for an attempt to cheat the Railway Company and also for using as genuine a forged document. The Trial Magistrate has acquitted the accused of an attempt to cheat, but has convicted him under s. 471 read with s. 468, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to imprisonment till the rising of the Court and a fine of Rs. 150.

The District Magistrate has made a belated reference to this Court recommending that the sentence be enhanced, and Mr. Shamair Chand, who has appeared for the accused to show cause against enhancement, urges that his client has been wrongly convicted and that the conviction should be set aside.

Now, sub-s. (6) which has been added to s. 439, Cr. P. C., by the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923, provides that "notwithstanding anything contained in this section, any convicted person, to whom an opportunity has been given under sub-s. (2) of showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, shall, in showing cause, be entitled also to show cause against his conviction." The effect of the enactment of this sub-section is that the High Court, when adjudicating upon an application for enhancement of sentence, is converted into a Court of Appeal against conviction. I must, however, administer the law as I find it.

In view of this express provision of the law, I have heard arguments on the merits and reached the conclusion that there is no satisfactory evidence to show that Ex. P B the genuineness of which has been impeached, is a forged document. It is to be observed that this document, which is written in Urdu, purports to be a list of articles purchased by the accused at Delhi and to bear the signature of Sheikh Karam Ilahi-Rahim Ilahi. Now Karam Ilahi, who was also prosecuted in this case but was subsequently discharged, has appeared as a witness for the prosecution, and he admits that he has a shop bearing the aforesaid name. Another witness for the prosecution, namely, Sub-Inspector Gian Chand, who investigated the case, deposes that he was told by Karam Ilahi that the invoice Ex. P B was written by his servant Ram Chand. This witness, when answering a question put by the Court at the end of his examination, tried to modify the effect of his admission by stating that Karam Ilahi subsequently denied that Ram Chand had written the document. Karam Ilahi himself as a witness for the prosecution disclaims the responsibility of his firm for preparing it, but considering that he was himself prosecuted as an offender and appeared as a witness after his discharge (a somewhat unusual and objectionable procedure), I am not prepared to attach any value to his evidence.

It may, therefore, be taken as proved that Ex. P B was written by Ram Chand on behalf of Karam Ilahi, Rahim Ilahi and the evidence also shows that this document consolidates several invoices representing goods purchased by the accused from various shops at Delhi. Karam Ilahi himself admits that Ex. P M is the list of the goods purchased from his own shop, and this list is embodied in Ex. P B. Now, Ex. P M, contains all the articles which were alleged to have been lost while the boxes were in the custody of the Railway; and it cannot, therefore, be seriously contended that the accused was claiming certain goods which he had never purchased.

The evidence for the prosecution shows that the articles in dispute were purchased by the accused from Karam Ilahi and were correctly entered in Ex. P B which was written by Karam Ilahi's servant Ram Ohand. These articles have apparently disappeared, but the question of the responsibility for the disappearance is a debatable one. One thing, however, is reasonably clear that the document, upon which the charge under s. 471 is founded, has not been proved to be a forged document.

The result of this finding is that the conviction cannot be sustained. Accordingly I set aside the conviction and the sentence and acquit the accused. The fine, if realised, shall be refunded to him.

An enquiry by the Magistrate, on a party's applying to him for postponement of the case to enable him to apply for transfer, into the grounds of transfer himself is highly improper and would naturally cause apprehension in the mind of the petitioner that the Tribunal trying the case is not likely to give him an impartial and unbiased hearing.

ORDER.—Proceedings were taken against the petitioner upon a complaint made under the provisions of ss. 352, 504, Indian Penal Code. In the course of these proceedings the petitioner applied to the Court for postponement of the case to enable him to apply for a transfer of the matter from the Court of this Magistrate to some other Magistrate. The Magistrate hearing the complaint thereupon requested the petitioner to make a statement as to the grounds of his transfer, and then proceeded to make a preliminary inquiry to ascertain whether these grounds were well founded. Having come to the conclusion that the grounds were false the Magistrate then made a report to the District Magistrate for the purpose of having the petitioner tried under s. 193, Indian Penal Code, for perjury. The learned Magistrate in para. 6 of his report makes a frank statement of these circumstances. It is obvious that the procedure adopted by the learned Magistrate was highly improper and would naturally cause apprehension in the mind of the petitioner that the tribunal trying his case was not likely to give him an impartial and unbiased hearing. Under these circumstances I have no option but to transfer the case to the Court of such other competent Magistrate as the District Magistrate might direct.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Aligarh, dated the 13th November 1925.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Applicants.

Mr. Sailanath Mukerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Aligarh. The facts out of which the reference arises are these. The complainant Chhidda had to deposit a sum of Rs. 615 to complete the purchase-money of a Court auction sale which had been concluded in the name of his wife. He had only Rs. 415 with him and wished to borrow the remaining Rs. 200 from the applicants Puran and Hoti. They agreed to advance it on condition that Chhidda made over the Rs. 415 he had with him, that they made the entire deposit and that the house was transferred into their names. Chhidda consented to this, and an application was made, but the Court refused it. This happened on 21st July.

Chhidda owed Puran and Hoti a sum equal to the amount which he had placed in their hands. They seem to have retained the Rs. 415 against their debt. On the following day he filed a complaint against them which was dismissed the same day under s. 203, Cr. P. C., on the ground that no criminal offence was established. On the 24th of July they filed a civil suit against him claiming Rs. 467 due to them from him. On 6th August while this suit was pending he filed a fresh complaint which was entertained by a different Magistrate.

The learned Sessions Judge has made this reference on three grounds, two of them technical and one a ground of substance. The technical grounds are that the second Magistrate could not entertain a fresh complaint unless the order dismissing the original complaint had first been set aside under s. 437, Cr. P. C. The learned Judge relies on an old ruling in Queen-Empress v. Adam Khan (1), but this ruling has not been followed in later cases. Ram Bharos v. Baban (2) and William Cecil Keymer v. Emperor (3) show that the opposite view has prevailed in later cases. The second ground is that the accused had no proper opportunity of producing their witnesses. On this point also I am not disposed to accept the Sessions Judge's view. The application for summoning witnesses was put in later, and the accused got the summons issued on their own responsibility, it being understood that the Court would not adjourn the case if the witnesses did not attend.

On the third point the reference must, in my opinion, prevail. The accused retained the money against the debt which was owing to them from Chhidda and there is nothing to show that in doing this they acted dishonestly. The Special Magistrate does not appear to have applied his mind to this point at all. I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the facts do not establish a case under s. 406, Indian Penal Code.

I accordingly accept this reference and set aside the conviction of the applicants. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—Petitioner who is a First Grade Pleader has been charged under s. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Pattukottah. He was engaged to represent the accused in a security case and all the charges against him except one alleged various acts of misconduct in relation to that case. These charges were made to the District Magistrate, Tanjore, by the Deputy Superintendent of Police, who suggested that proceedings should be taken against petitioner under the Legal Practitioners Act. In the result the Additional District Magistrate forwarded the Police report to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Pattukottah for enquiry and the latter issued notice to petitioner under s. 14 of the Act. It is not quite clear what was in the mind of the Additional District Magistrate whether he intended that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate should himself dispose of the charges or whether his idea was that a sort of preliminary enquiry should be held and a report should be submitted with a view to possible future action by himself. From either point of view, he acted without jurisdiction. The Legal Practitioners Act makes no provision either for the transfer of proceedings or for the holding of a preliminary enquiry of such a nature. Mr. Jayarama Aiyar contends that in any event most of the charges against his client cannot be enquired into as they relate to alleged acts of misconduct not committed in or in relation to the Court which proposes to enquire into them. That, we consider, is an objection that should more properly be taken before the District Magistrate, who will now proceed to deal with the matter himself. As, however, it has been taken here, we may as well dispose of it at once. The view relied on by Mr. Jayarama Iyer finds support in several decisions of the Patna High Court of which we may quote that reported in Emperor v. Satyendra Nath Roy (1) as an example. The same view has been expressed by the Calcutta High Court in In re Radha Churn Chukerbutty (2). With great respect, we prefer to follow the ruling of the Calcutta High Court reported as In re Rabindra Chandra Chatterjee (3). As pointed out by Woodroffe, J., and Mookerjee, J., s. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act does not limit the consideration of a charge to the Court in which the misconduct is alleged to have been committed. To say that it does, is, we think, to read into s. 14 something that is not there.

The District Magistrate will now dispose of the report made to him in accordance with law, but we think it undesirable that proceedings for misconduct against the defence Vakil should be taken before the security case against his client has been disposed of.

JUDGMENT.

IN APPEAL NO. 48 OF 1924.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants and arises out of a suit for possession of a share of a jote by the plaintiff. The main ground of defence was that the suit was barred by the special Law of Limitation as provided for in Art. III of Sch. III to the Bengal Tenancy Act. This defence was given effect to by the Trial Court and the suit was dismissed. On appeal by the plaintiff the learned Subordinate Judge of Dinajpur has found that the plaintiff has purchased a share of the jote from the owners thereof and that dispossession was by one Jogendra who had purchased also a share of the same jote. Although Jogendra was an officer of the defendant the landlord the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that Jogendra dispossessed the plaintiff as a purchaser of a share of the jote and not as an agent of the landlord. In this view the lower Appellate Court held that the suit was not barred by limitation and sent the case back to the learned Munsif for ascertaining the share which the plaintiff had purchased and on such ascertainment of the share the learned Subordinate

Judge has directed the decree to be awarded to the plaintiff.

The only ground which was taken by the learned Vakil for the appellant was that the Trial Court had found that Jogendra was really a benamdar for the landlord the defendant as such the dispossession effected by Jogendra was the dispossession effected by the landlord. The learned Vakil for the appellant contended that the finding of benami arrived at by the Trial Court had not been specifically dealt with by the lower Appellate Court.

I do not think that this contention should prevail. The learned Subordinate Judge found that Jogendra purchased the land and dispossessed the plaintiff as such purchaser and not as an agent of the landlord. I think the finding is quite sufficient for the purpose of holding that the dispossession was not by the landlord, nor was it on his behalf. Therefore it seems that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is correct and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Sub-section (3) of s. 12 of the Limitation Act does not apply to an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The time spent in obtaining a copy of the judgment appealed from cannot, therefore, be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed for such application.

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellants,

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and S. B. Johari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A question of limitation arises in connection with this application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The judgment of this Court was delivered on the 30th of March 1925, and admittedly the application for leave to appeal was not presented till the 20th of October 1925.

Certain reasons are given in explanation of the delay. It is said that some time had to be taken for the purpose of obtaining a copy of the decree of this Court, and further it is said that some time was taken for the purpose of obtaining a copy of this Court's judgment.

It is argued on behalf of the applicant that if both the periods just referred to can be taken into consideration and allowed, then the application for leave to appeal is within time. It is conceded, however, that if sub s. (3) of s. 12 of the Limitation Act does not apply to the case now before us, then it must be held that the application for leave is beyond time.

Section 12 of the Limitation Act provides for exclusion of time which is consumed in certain legal proceedings which are obligatory. In sub-s. (2) of s. 12 it is provided that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal, an application for leave to appeal, and an application for a review of judgment, the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, sentence or order appealed from or sought to be reviewed, shall be excluded. Clearly this sub section provides in the cases mentioned for the exclusion of the time which is necessary for obtaining copies both of the judgment and of the decree.

When we come, however, to sub s. (3) we find it laid down as follows: "Where a decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall also be excluded". The question is whether sub-s. (3) of s. (12) applies to a case of this kind, namely, an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. In our opinion it does not. To begin with the language of sub-s. (3), when contrasted with sub-s. (2), clearly contemplates the exclusion from the scope of sub s. (3) of the case of an application for leave to appeal; and further it is to be noted that for the purpose of making an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, the rules of this Court do not make it necessary that the applicant shall at the time of filing his application for leave file also a copy of the judgment on which the decree is founded. That being so, it seems to us that, for the reasons just given, we must hold that the present application is beyond time. The applicant is not entitled to exclude the time which he took in obtaining a copy of the judgment of this Court. The application is, therefore, dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

The mere circumstance that a decree passed against a firm as it stands can be executed only against the property of the firm does not preclude its eventual execution against the individual partners of the firm as soon as any or all of the conditions set forth in O. XXI, r. 50, C. P. C., are fulfilled.

Mr Shamair Chand and Lala Jagan Nath, for the Petitioner.

Mr Nanak Chand Pandit, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—The sole object of this review is to have it made clear that our judgment of the 21st January 1925 does not conclude the question whether the decree may be executed against the judgment-debtors individually. Before the learned Judge in Chambers the only matter decided was whether the order of the Executing Court passed in review was competent. The other issues in this case were not decided by him inasmuch as his decision on the first point rendered their adjudication unnecessary.

There can be no doubt that the decree as it stands can be executed only against the property of the firm, but that circumstance does not preclude the eventual execution of the decree against the individual partners as soon as any or all of the conditions set forth in O. XXI, r. 50 are established.

We accordingly review our judgment of the 21st January 1925 so far as to make it clear that that judgment in no way debars the Executing Court from trying the other issues in the case relative to the liability of the individual members of the firm to satisfy out of their own property the decree issued against the firm.

In this hearing the parties shall bear their own costs.

A Small Cause Court is entitled to decide a question of title if it arises incidentally, but where the plaintiff and the written statement show that the issue to be fought out and decided is one of title, the suit cannot be considered to be one of small cause nature

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment and decree of Mr Justice Wallace, dated the 27th of March 1924, in S. A. No. 1131 of 1921, preferred to the High Court against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chittoor, in A. S. No. 32 of 1920, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Sholinghur, in O. S. No. 444 of 1918.

Mr. T. Kumaraswamiah, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. S. Chempaksa Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only point urged in this appeal is that the suit is of a small cause nature and no second appeal lay inasmuch as the amount of the claim was less than Rs. 500. It is urged that when the objection was taken before the learned Judge who decided the second appeal, he overruled it. We consider the learned Judge is perfectly right in overruling the objection as the main issue in the case related to the question of title. No doubt a Small Cause Court is entitled to decide a question of title if it arises incidentally. But where the plaintiff and the written statement show that the issue to be fought out and decided is one of title, we think the suit cannot be considered to be one of small cause nature.

There is no other point raised in this appeal. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

The mere non-joinder of a party in an ejectment suit is not fatal to the trial of the suit. The only result of such non-joinder would be that the party not impleaded will not be bound by any decree passed in the suit.

Where a lower Appellate Court refuses to draw an inference of the permanency of a tenancy from the facts that the tenancy is an old one, that the rent has not been varied and that the land was let out for the purpose not of building any permanent structure but of raising huts, there is no error of law which would justify the interference of the High Court in second appeal

Babu Charu Chandra Ganguli, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and arises out of a suit for ejectment by the plaintiff. The defence of the defendants was that the tenancy was a permanent one and was not, therefore, determinable by the plaintiff-landlord.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court reversed that judgment and decreed the plaintiff's suit with costs and made a decree for ejectment giving the defendants six months' time to vacate the land.

In this second appeal by the defendants the learned Advocate for the defendants contended first that the suit was bad, because one of the sub-lessees was not a party to the suit. We do not think that mere non-joinder of a party in an ejectment suit is fatal to the trial of the case. It may be that the party not being impleaded may not be bound by the decree. But so far as the defendants are concerned it has been found that they have no right to retain possession of the land.

The second ground which was suggested was that upon the facts found by the lower Appellate Court we ought to presume that the tenancy held by the defendants was a permanent one. The only facts found are that the tenancy was created more than 74 years ago and the rent has not been changed during all these years. The lower Appellate Court, however, points out that there has been no case of succession in this case, because the different tenants who held the land were not shown to have claimed through each other. Therefore in this case the only facts found are that the tenancy is an old one and the rent has not been varied and that the land was let out for the purpose not of building any permanent structure but of raising huts. I do not think that there was an error of law in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court when that Court refused to draw an inference of permanency on the facts found.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

A decree was passed by the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge and shortly afterwards the Court was abolished and the work of that Court was transferred to another Court. After a brief interval, however, the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge was re-established and an application to execute the decree was made to that Court.

Appeals from an order of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 23rd April 1924, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated the 15th December 1923.

Syed Nurul Hasan, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—These two appeals arise out of two orders made by the District Judge of Gaya on the 23rd April 1924, setting aside two orders made on the 15th December 1923 by the Additional Subordinate Judge of that District.

The events leading up to the last mentioned orders were as follows: Two decrees were made on the 21st August 1920 by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gaya. Sometime, afterwards, it is not known on what precise date, the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge was abolished and the business of that Court was transferred to the Third Subordinate Judge's Court. Subsequently the Additional Court was re-established and on the 27th August 1923 two applications were made to it for the execution of those decrees, and on the 15th December 1923 the Court held that he had jurisdiction to entertain the applications.

Against this decision two appeals were preferred before the District Judge who disagreed with the Additional Subordinate Judge and held that the Additional Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction and that the execution applications must be dismissed.

Now the matter turns upon ss 37 and 38 of the C. P. C. of 1908. The learned District Judge is of opinion that the Additional Subordinate Judge's Court having ceased to exist, the present Additional Subordinate Judge's Court cannot be the Court which passed the decree, and, therefore, is not competent to entertain the execution application. The learned Judge does not address himself to the latter part of sub-cl. (b) of s. 37 which provides that if the Court of first instance has ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute the decree the Court which, if the suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted at the time of making the application for the execution of the decree, would have jurisdiction to try such a suit, shall be included within the expression "the Court which passed the decree." Therefore, even if it be held in this case that the Court of first instance has ceased to exist, the present Additional Subordinate Judge would have jurisdiction to execute the decree if he has jurisdiction to try the suit to which the decree relates. Now there is nothing on the record to show that the present Additional Subordinate Judge has not got jurisdiction to try the suit. Ordinarily Additional Subordinate Judges have jurisdiction over the whole district and unless that jurisdiction has been curtailed by an express order made by the Local Government under s. 13 of the Civil Courts Act or in consequence of re-arrangement of business made by the District Judge under sub-cl. (2) of that section it must be assumed that the Additional Subordinate Judge has jurisdiction to try the suit and, therefore, also to execute the decree.

In point of fact I doubt if it can be said that the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge has ceased to exist. What has happened is that the Court was temporarily abolished and was re-established and that at the time when the application for execution was made it was in fact in existence. It is contended that the expression 'ceased to exist' means "is not in existence at the time when the application for execution is made." If that view is accepted, then the Court of the present Additional Subordinate Judge being the Court which passed the decree has jurisdiction to execute it. The argument of the respondents is that if a Court once ceases to exist that Court cannot again be revived and that although another Court of the same designation is established within the district with the same jurisdiction it cannot be said that it is the same Court. Now "Courts" in the Civil Courts Act are designated by their titles and if there are more Courts than one of the same designation, then they are further distinguished by numerals. If the officer presiding over the Court of the First Subordinate Judge is temporarily transferred and after an interval another officer is appointed to preside over that Court it would not be a straining of ordinary language to hold that the first Court ceased to exist but has been re-established. I am of opinion that in this case the Court of the present Additional Subordinate Judge being a Court of the same designation bears the impress of the identity of the Court which was abolished.

In this view the latter part of s. 37, cl. (b) is not required for the purposes of this case; nor has the third sub-clause of s. 13 any application.

Reference has been made to s. 17 of the Civil Courts Act; but that also has no application to this case, because it does not relate to execution proceedings.

The decision in Tara Chand Marwari v. Ram Nath Singh (1) appears at first sight to be against the view which we have just taken, but on an examination of the facts of the case it would seem that the decision there turned upon the question whether there was at the time when the application for execution was made any Additional Subordinate Judge in the district. Apparently there was not and, therefore, the permanent Subordinate Judge of the district assumed jurisdiction over the case. But while the execution case was proceeding, another officer was posted to the district as Additional Subordinate Judge and the question arose whether the permanent Judge ceased to have jurisdiction to continue the execution proceedings which were pending before him. It was held that he had jurisdiction to continue the proceedings. Reference was incidentally made in that decision to s. 17 of the Civil Courts Act; but it is not clear how that section applied.

The result is that upon the provisions of the C. P. C. it seems quite clear that the learned District Judge's order cannot be supported and that the Additional Subordinate Judge's order was correct.

The appeals, therefore, will be decreed with costs. There will be separate costs in each case.

The suit was decreed and the defendants were directed to hold an election after issuing proper notices. An election was accordingly held, but it was set aside on the application of one of the defendants and the suit was dismissed:

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—This appeal is directed against a decree which purports to have been passed under the provisions of the Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863).

In the City of Murshidabad there is a wakf estate known as Basant Ali Khan's endowment estate. Under the Act, the management of this endowment is vested in a manager under the supervision of a Committee of three members. At the beginning of the present year the three members were Syed Faizuddin Ali, Syed Abdul Hussain and Mirza Yahia Sheraji. On January 23rd, however, Syed Abdul Hussain died, and a vacancy was created on the Committee. Under s. 10 of the Act it was the duty of the two remaining members to take steps to elect a new member within three months of the vacancy occurring. One of the members appears to have issued notice about an election, but on an application by some of the interested persons the learned Judge held that the notice must be issued by both members and that a notice by one alone was not valid. No election, therefore, was held on that notice. Then two interested persons Khurshed Mirza and Sarfaraz Ali Begg filed a plaint, with the District Judge's permission, against the two remaining members as defendants, and in this plaint the prayers were (a) that the Court should direct the defendants to take proper steps for the holding of an election, and fix a date within which the notices should be issued, and (b) that the Court should remove one or both of the members in case of default. Mirza Yahia Sheraji professed that he was anxious to comply with the rules but that he was thwarted by his colleague. Syed Faizuddin said that an election could not be held until the register of electors had been revised.

The learned Judge heard arguments and on March 28th, he delivered judgment: he held that the plaintiffs had a cause of action, that there was nothing objectionable in the form of the suit, that the permission to sue had been given in accordance with law, and that the register of electors could not be revised until after the vacancy had been filled up, and he ordered the defendants jointly to issue proper notices for an election by April 22nd.

No appeal was preferred against this decree and it was in fact obeyed. Notices were issued by the defendants fixing April 18th as the date of the election, and an election was held on that date. There were two candidates, and one of them, Mahomed Yusuf Saheb, received 27 votes and the other only two. The result was reported to the Judge by Mirza Yahia Sheraji who pointed out that his colleague had not attended the election.

Then on April 27th Sayed Faizuddin presented a petition to the Judge objecting to the validity of the election. It was ordered that the petition should be considered at the final hearing of the case. On May 2nd the learned Judge heard arguments, and on the 4th he delivered judgment: he held that the register of electors was incomplete and defective, that an election held under the supervision of only one member of the Committee was invalid and that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the defendants guilty of any misconduct, and on these findings he dismissed the suit with costs to the defendant Syed Faizuddin. This is the judgment which is attacked in the appeal.

Other proceedings followed. Two new 'interested persons' Syed Kader Ali and Syed Ishfaq Ali on May 13th moved the Judge to appoint some one to fill the vacancy. Notices of this application were served on Sayed Faizuddin and Mirza Yahia Sheraji. On June 13th the latter objected that Mahomed Yusuf Saheb had been duly elected, while Kader Ali and Sarfaraz Ali asked for an adjournment. The learned Judge, however on the same day, appointed Syed Mehedi Ali to be a member of the Committee in place of the deceased Syed Abdul Hosain. This is the order which forms the subject of a rule issued by us at the instance of Khurshed Mirza and Mirza Yahia Sheraji. To this narrative of the facts, I must add one more detail, and this that Mahomed Yusuf Saheb was not made a party to the proceedings after the election held on April 18th.

The contention of the plaintiffs is that their suit was decided on March 23th when the learned Judge directed the defendants to issue notices. This contention seems to me to admit of no answer. The plaintiffs' cause of action was default on the part of the surviving members to take steps to hold an election, and when the defendants were ordered to issue notices by April 22nd the plaintiffs had obtained all that they sought, and the suit was at an end. The cause of action with which the Judge was dealing in his second judgment was something that had happened after the delivery of his first judgment. Moreover the person who considered himself aggrieved was not either of the plaintiffs but one of the defendants, and the proceedings were really carried on at his instance, and at this stage of the case Mahomed Yusuf Saheb was not made a party although the validity of his election was being discussed.

For these reasons I hold that the learned Judge's decision of May 4th was wrong: he should have refused to entertain Syed Faizuddin's petition on the ground that the suit was at an end. The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the judgment and decree of May 4th are set aside.

It follows as a corollary that the Rule must be made absolute for with the judgment of May 4th set aside there is no vacancy for the Judge to fill, until the election of April 18th is cancelled by proceedings taken in accordance with law.

There remains the question of costs. I think it will be enough to order Faizuddin to bear the costs of the plaintiffs in the suit and in the appeal, in other respects leaving the parties to pay their own costs.

The hearing fee in the appeal is fixed at three gold mohurs.

Mukerji, J.—I agree.

U P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), ss. 110, 111, 113—Partition proceeding—Objection filed after expiry of period fixed, whether can be entertained

Where an objection is filed in a partition proceeding after the expiry of the time fixed for filing objections in a proclamation made under s. 110 of the U P Land Revenue Act, but before the Court has taken any steps under s. 113 of the Act, the Court is not precluded from dealing with the objection, and if it decides it, the decision will be taken to be under s. 111

Second appeal against a decree of the Third Additional District Judge, Lucknow at Hardoi, dated the 13th November 1924, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, First Class, District Hardoi, dated the 8th December 1923,

Mr. Raj Narain Shukla, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ghulam Hasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of certain orders passed in the partition proceedings. Rudan Singh is a mortgagee with possession of 2 biswas share in villages Kudbapur and Bindhauri from Pancham Singh. The mortgagor and the mortgagee jointly filed applications for partition of both the villages. A proclamation was issued under s. 110 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act fixing 7th March 1922 as the date on which objections were to be filed by other co-sharers. There were several adjournments and then certain objections were filed by the applicants and the opposite party on 16th March 1923. There were several adjournments again and ultimately another objection was filed by Kalka Singh and others (opposite party) on the 4th September 1923. That objection was to the effect that certain sir lands should not be partitioned and should be allotted to their 9 biswas share exclusively. The objection was fixed for hearing for the 25th September 1923. On the 25th September 1923 the objection was brought on record in the presence of the parties and it was ordered that a proclamation should be issued fixing 30th October 1923 for hearing. There were several hearings again and then the learned Assistant Collector passed the orders in question on the 8th December 1923 in the presence of the parties. He allowed the objection and ordered that the sir plots should not be partitioned and should be allotted to the objectors exclusively.—The applicant Rudan Singh appealed but his appeals were dismissed by the Additional District Judge, on the 13th November 1924. He has now filed these second appeals—So far as I see there is no force in these appeals.

The applicant's contention is that the respondents' application or objection should not have been entertained as it was not filed within the time originally fixed for filing objections under s. 110, Oudh Land Revenue Act and that the appellant was not given an opportunity to contest the respondents' application or objection and the proceedings were irregular and bad in law.

The first contention has no force. Where an objection is raised after the appointed time but before the Court has taken any steps under s. 113 of the Oudh Revenue Act, a Revenue Court is not precluded from dealing with it and if it does decide it, the decision will be taken to be under s. 111 of the Act. Rule 9, Circular XXI, Deptt. II of the Boards Circular shows that the objections could be entertained subsequent to the date originally fixed in the proclamation. The ruling in Tulsi Prasad v. Matru Mal (1) is also to the same effect. The Court had not taken any action under s. 113 of the said Act up to that time and I think the objections were properly admitted and brought on record on the 25th September 1923. The learned Assistant Collector had sound reasons for entertaining the objections. I think he had not exercised his discretion improperly in this case.

The second contention also has no force. The appellant had ample opportunity to make any objections against the respondents' application and to adduce any evidence for disproving the allegations contained therein. However he failed to do so. He filed no defence and produced no evidence, oral or documentary, though he had ample opportunity to do so. The order in question was passed about 2½ months after the 25th September 1923. He had full knowledge of the respondents' application and also of the documentary evidence produced by them but nothing was said or done by him to show that he meant to oppose the respondents' application. When no defence was filed, the first Court could not frame any issue. The Court duly considered the documentary evidence produced by the respondents and decided the matter in their favour. He was perfectly right in doing so. The documentary evidence shows clearly that the sir in dispute belongs to the respondents exclusively. The procedure, so far as applicable to this case, was followed properly and there was no miscarriage of justice. In my opinion the learned Additional District Judge was perfectly right in dismissing the appeals.

I dismiss both the appeals with costs and order the appellant to pay the costs of the respondents.

An arrangement between co-sharers whereunder rent due to one of them from the others is set off against the rent due from him to the others, the balance alone being payable in cash, does not prevent the rent from falling due and does not operate as a bar to the maintainability of a suit by one co-sharer to recover rent due to him from the other co-sharers. It is, however, open to the defendants in such a suit to show that the rent has already been paid off by set-off [p. 906, col. 1]

Mr. S. C. Maity and Babu Apurba Charan Mookerjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mohendra Nath Roy and Babu Santosh Kumar Pal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs and arises out of a suit for rents for the years 1324 to 1327. In para. 8 of the plaint, the plaintiffs stated amongst other matters this "out of the said purchased niskar property plaintiffs also having purchased some jote right lands no rents were claimed amongst the co-sharers and the rent due to each co-sharer used to be set-off, but the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in collusion with other defendants disregarded the said arrangement and instituted Title Suit No. 2062 of 1919 in the Munsif's First Court Sadar on the claim of getting mesne profits and khas possession with regard to some other jotes by the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and obtained decree with mesne profits from 1324 A. S." Now the defence of the defendants was substantially the same as alleged by the plaintiffs that there was an arrangement between the co-sharers by which instead of paying rent to each other the rent due to each other was to be set-off. But the written statement goes a little further than what was stated in the plaint. It seems to state to the effect that, as a matter of fact, no rent was payable to each other at all. Now it appears that the learned Munsif on the 3rd of May 1921 recorded the following order: "Parties are ready. Suit taken up. Heard Pleaders on both sides about maintainability of the suit documents Exs. 1 and 2 marked for the plaintiffs and A and B for the defendant. Order reserved." It appears that the learned Munsif proposed to try the question as to maintainability of the suit upon the pleadings and also upon the four Exhibits which were marked in the case a point preliminary to the trial of the suit on the merits. From what one finds in the two judgments it appears that the question as to maintainability of the suit was tried on the pleadings and not with reference to any of the four documents which were marked as exhibits in the case. The learned Munsif in the course of his judgment stated as follows: "It is stated in para. 8 of the plaint that by an amicable arrangement and agreement between the co-owners no body realized rent from anybody and the rents due to one used to be set-off against the rents due from him to the other." The learned Munsif does not refer to any of these documents as to what the real arrangement or agreement between the parties was; and on this arrangement as set out in para. 8 the learned Munsif later on says this. "Because by the agreement between the parties realization of rents by one from another came to an end and one ceased to be a tenant under the other and a rent suit by one against another cannot lie." In this view the learned Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit as not maintainable. On appeal by the plaintiffs the learned District Judge also tried the suit on the question of its maintainability and holding that the suit, apparently on the arrangement admitted by the plaintiffs, was not maintainable dismissed the suit. Now, the present appeal is by the plaintiffs against that judgment and decree of the learned District Judge. It is contended by the learned Counsel who appears for the plaintiffs that the suit was tried on the issue as to whether it was or was not maintainable upon the statement contained in the plaint and that the agreement as stated in para. 8 of the plaint does not prevent the present suit being maintainable; secondly that the finding of the learned Munsif as to the effect of the arrangement that one ceases to be a tenant under the other was erroneous, because that was not the effect of the arrangement set out in the plaint. It was next argued that the learned District Judge has also erred in dismissing the suit as not maintainable, as he also tried the suit on the plaint filed by the plaintiff and that the learned District Judge has not based any of his findings upon any evidence in the case.

Now, it is quite clear to us that the suit was tried as on an objection in the nature of a demurrer and, therefore, the plaintiff's case as made in the plaint ought to be accepted as correct. It was contended by the defendants-respondents as they are entitled to do that on the arrangement set out in the plaint the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable. But we are, of opinion, that the arrangement as set out in the 8th para. of the plaint, is nothing more than an arrangement which one finds very usual in this country, namely, that when rents are due to zemindars each paying rent to and receiving from the other, instead of each paying the amount to the other, the payment of the rent is usually made by entries in the account books and in the result rent is set-off against each other and if there is any balance payable to either of them only the balance is paid. So far as I can understand the arrangement clearly mentioned that the rent when its fell due to each other instead of paying in cash to each other there would be set-off between the co-sharers. This arrangement did not prevent the rent from falling due. All that it provides is that after the rent has fallen due to each other payment of the rent is made by set-off against each other. Payment is not really effected until the set-off is made. Now, if the plaintiffs in disregard of this arrangement bring a suit for rent due to them the defendants may show that under the arrangement they refrained from realizing the rent which fall due to them and that the money has already been paid by set-off when rent falls due, the party in whose favour the rent is due, is entitled to enforce his right. Such an arrangement cannot prevent the rent from being realized unless it is shown that the rent has been paid either by set-off or otherwise. Of course it is open to a defendant in a suit like this to show, as I have already said, that the rent has already been paid by set-off between the parties. But if there has been no such set-off I do not see how a mere arrangement to make a set-off stops the rent falling due and in fact the arrangement set only by the plaintiffs contemplates the rent falling due. It is no doubt open to the two co-sharers to make an arrangement by appropriate agreement putting an end to the relationship of landlord and tenant between themselves, or, in other words giving up the right to receive rent in favour of each other. But that is not the agreement which is set out in the plaint. The defendants as I have already stated, go further in their written statement as to the nature of the agreement but no effect can be given to that plea without entering into evidence. In the circumstances we think that the judgments and decrees of the Courts below ought to be set aside and the case sent back to the Court of first instance to be decided after taking evidence to be adduced by the parties. That Court will decide the whole suit once for all upon the issues which may arise between the parties. All that we decide is that para. 8 of the plaint does not put an end to the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. The rent does fall due and the defendant cannot escape liability without proving payment in some way.

Costs will abide the result.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Ali Zaheer Niamatullah and H. Husain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are as follows: One Ram Raghubir obtained a simple money-decree against one Raja Durga Prasad from the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow some years ago. He also obtained a similar decree against the same judgment-debtor from the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi. The decree passed by the Court at Lucknow was transferred for execution to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi. Proceedings in execution of the two decrees were taken from time to time by the decree-holder. Eventually on the 13th of December 1915 an application was made to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi by the decree-holder in relation to the Hardoi decree that certain villages belonging to the judgment-debtor be attached and sold for the satisfaction of that decree. The Subordinate Judge passed an order in terms of the prayer contained in the application of the decree-holder. On the 25th of January 1917 another application was made by the decree-holder to the same Court in relation to the execution of the Lucknow decree with a prayer similar to the one which was made in the previous application. That prayer was also granted by the Subordinate Judge. Afterwards both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor died. Proceedings for substitution of their representatives took place in respect of both the decrees in the Hardoi Court and the substitutions were allowed by the Court.

Against the execution proceedings taken in the Hardoi Court two appeals were preferred by the representative of the judgment-debtor to the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The Bench who heard those appeals decided that the substitutions were properly made. It further decided that the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge as to the attachment and sale of certain immoveable properties of the judgment-debtor in execution of the Hardoi and also of the Lucknow decrees were illegal in view of the fact that on the date of the order passed in relation to the Hardoi decree the immoveable property of the judgment-debtor was held by the Collector under the powers conferred on him by Sch. III of the C. P. C. in execution of a decree of Ram Sahai and Puttu Lal and on the date of the application relating to the Lucknow decree that immoveable property was held by the Collector under the same Schedule in execution of a decree held by the Upper India Bank, Limited. In this connection we would refer to the orders made by the Bench of the late Judicial Commissioner's Court dated the 27th of February 1925 in Miscellaneous Applications Nos. 43 and 44 of 1925. Accordingly the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge in each of the execution applications was set aside. The applications of the decree-holder were, however, maintained and the decree-holder was directed to proceed according to law.

On the 15th of April 1925 the decree-holder again went to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi with applications asking for the transfer of the record of the execution cases to the Collector for further action. These applications were opposed by the judgment-debtor on various grounds. These grounds were made the subject-matter of three issues in the Court below. All those issues have been found by that Court against the judgment-debtor and we infer that the result has been that the prayer of the applications made by the decree-holder has been granted. The judgment-debtor has preferred these appeals against the order of the Subordinate Judge dated the 15th of August 1925.

At the hearing of the appeals only one point was urged before us by the learned Counsel for the appellant in support of the appeals and that was that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to transfer the execution cases to the Collector. The argument advanced by him is that only such decrees could be transferred to the Collector for execution as are mentioned in s. 68 of the C. P. C. and that the decrees now under consideration are not such decrees.

We are of opinion that the argument is sound and must prevail. It has already been stated by us in this judgment that the two decrees which the respondent holds against the appellant are simple money decrees in neither of which the Court has ordered any immoveable property to be sold and at the time when the order for attachment and sale was passed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi, it could not be made then for the reason that under para. 11 of the Third Schedule of the C. P. C. the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to issue any process against the judgment-debtor's property as that property was held by the Collector in execution of other decrees. The order of the learned Subordinate Judge under appeal must, therefore, be set aside.

The learned Counsel for the decree-holder-respondent strenuously argued that the substance of the decree-holder's applications was not the transfer of the decree to the Collector for execution but merely for a share in the proceeds of the sale of the judgment-debtor's property in execution of decree in the hands of the Collector. As regards this argument we may say that in the first place there is no such prayer contained in the application and in the second place we do not think we would be justified in treating the decree-holder's application as one for rateable distribution in terms of s. 73 of the C. P. C. That is a function which in the first instance must be performed by the Court seized of the execution and it will be open to the decree-holder, if he is so advised, to seek the aid of the Court in that direction.

We may mention that the Collector still holds the judgment-debtor's property under his control in virtue of the powers conferred on him by s. 68 of the C. P. C. in relation to a mortgage-decree held by the Upper India Bank, Limited. So even on this date a new process cannot be issued against the judgment-debtor's property.

The result is that we allow these appeals, set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge in each case and direct that the decree-holder's applications of the 15th of April 1925 be disposed of according to law. The respondent must pay the appellant's costs of these appeals but no order as to the costs in the lower Court.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants and arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for declaration of their right to a share in the properties in suit and for possession after partition by metes and bounds. The properties in suit are certain jamas and the plaintiffs claimed a  $\frac{3}{4}$ th share in those properties. The defence of the defendants was that they were the owners of the jotes and were in exclusive possession thereof for a very long time without any connection whatsoever with the plaintiffs.

The facts shortly stated are these: It appears that one Janaki died leaving three sons Dhir Nath, Asinath and Kalinath. Dhirmath had four sons, namely, Kachu, Tepu, Fulchan and Fedhu. The plaintiffs are the sons of Kachu and the other two sons of Dhirmath, namely, Tepu and Fulchan. The defendants are the sons of Fedhu who according to them was adopted by Asinath.

The plaintiffs' case as presented in the first Court was that they were in possession of their share in the jotes which were their ancestral properties by receipt of paddy from their adhiars and were, therefore, in joint possession of their share with the defendants. The plaintiffs alleged that they had been dispossessed after a criminal case from all lands except those mentioned in schedule "kha" to the plaint.

The learned Munsif found that the plaintiffs' story that they were in joint possession with the defendants was not established. He found that Tepu, to use his own words, lived in a place called Tepuigari, four or five miles away from the suit land and he migrated there several decades ago. His sons and daughters were all born there. Plaintiffs' witness Mantra Gobinda, a man of Bhandardaha, where the suit land is situated says that he has not seen Tepu for many years—20 or 30 years. Srikanta and Dhepra also live at Kanfata, a place within the jurisdiction of the Cooh Behar State. Fulchan also lives at a distant place. In effect the learned Munsif found that some of the plaintiffs and the ancestors of the others had left the village more than 30 years before the suit and set up their own respective cultivation at those distant places, and that the story of the plaintiffs that they were in receipt of the bhag paddy was unworthy of credit. He further pointed out that neither Tepu, nor Fulchan, nor the sons of Kachu who are the plaintiffs in this case had come to depose in this suit. He further pointed out that the story of their joint possession with the defendants was not supported by the oath of any of the plaintiffs in the case. On these findings the learned Munsif dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the learned Officiating Subordinate Judge has reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and declared the plaintiffs' title and remanded the case for effecting partition of the plaintiffs' share. The learned Subordinate Judge has not dealt with any of the categorical findings arrived at by the learned Munsif which I have stated above. From the mere fact that the properties were ancestral properties of the defendants and the plaintiffs at a remote date he comes to the conclusion that the defendants not having asserted a hostile title to the knowledge of the plaintiffs the lands in suit must be inferred to have been in the custody, to use his own words, "of their co-owners."

The learned Vakil who appears for the defendants-appellants contends that the theory of the plaintiffs' possession through the defendants should not have been relied upon by the lower Appellate Court when the plaintiffs' case was that they were in actual possession of their own lands by settling the lands on their own behalf with the adharas. The learned Subordinate Judge has not taken any notice of the findings of the learned Munsif that the plaintiffs had cut off all connections with these properties for, to use the words of the Munsif, "several decades." It is quite apparent that the learned Subordinate Judge was not prepared to dissent from the findings of fact arrived at by the learned Munsif. I think the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellants ought to be given effect to. When the plaintiffs were found to have no connection with these properties for over 30 years and their positive case that they were in actual possession of the lands for themselves failed. I do not think that there was any room for the presumption which the learned Subordinate Judge has raised in favour of the plaintiffs, namely, that the defendants were in possession on behalf of the plaintiffs. I think, therefore, when the plaintiffs suing in ejectment made a positive case that they were in possession of the property within 12 years and failed to establish that case the suit should have been dismissed.

We think, therefore, this appeal should be allowed and the judgment of the first Court restored with costs both of this appeal and of the appeal before the Subordinate Judge.

C P Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s 220 (p)—Sadar lambardar—Remuneration, claim to, when maintainable.

A sadar lambardar is not entitled to any remuneration unless and until he gets it fixed by the Revenue Authorities under s 220 (p) of the C. P. Land Revenue Act. [p. 912, col. 1]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the

ORDER.

Findlay, Offg. J. C.—(September 9, 1925).—The plaintiff-respondent Daulat sued the defendant-appellant Anandrao for the recovery of certain items of Government revenue and the like which he alleged were due to him as sadar lambardar of Mauza Patansaongi and Beed. Amongst the items sued for were alleged sums said to be due in respect of his remuneration as sadar lambardar. The plaintiff was admittedly sadar lambardar in the years 1323 and 1330 Fasli of Mauza Patansaongi as well as of Mauza Beed in the year 1329. The Subordinate Judge held that he was entitled as sadar lambardar to the remuneration provided for in s. 192 of the Act and he accordingly granted the items in question. An appeal to the Additional District Judge likewise failed. His point of view was that if the other lambardars of the pattis concerned are dissatisfied with the arrangement under which the sadar lambardar continues to receive all the remuneration it was their duty to apply to the Deputy Commissioner for re-fixation thereof. Until the rate of remuneration had been newly fixed the old rate must remain in force and could not be disputed in the Civil Court. The appellant has come up in second appeal against the decision of the Additional District Judge.

It is admitted that the Deputy Commissioner has not re-fixed the remuneration since the new Act came into force and since a sadar lambardar was appointed. The contention urged on behalf of the appellant is that the plaintiff clearly cannot be entitled to the full amount of the remuneration contemplated in s. 192 of the Land Revenue Act of 1917. It is urged that the other lambardars of the pattis concerned have also duties and responsibilities in respect of which they are entitled to remuneration and that it was never intended by the Legislature that the sadar lambardar as such would prima facie continue to draw all the remuneration in question. Counsel in arguing the case before me evidently failed to notice the judgment in Second Appeal No. 165 of 1922 which has now been published in Janrao v. Baliram (1). The penultimate paragraph of that judgment reads as follows :—

"There is nothing also in s. 220 of the new Act, under which exclusive jurisdiction is given to Revenue Authorities, and the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is barred in certain matters, which either precludes the Civil Courts from entertaining, or oust their jurisdiction in respect of a claim by a lambardar for the recovery of arrears of remuneration payable to him. So far as the sadar lambardarship is concerned no special remuneration is payable to him as such. The same remuneration is, therefore, payable whether a person is lambardar or sadar lambardar. The result is that plaintiff is entitled to recover the remuneration claimed for all the years in suit."

In addition the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner who decided the case placed reliance on the terms of s. 229, the saving provision of the Act. With all respect it seems to me that the view of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner taken in the judgment referred to requires re-consideration. I know of no reason why the sadar lambardar as such can be held to be the equivalent of the lambardars, four in number, who are in existence in the mahal we are concerned with and I think the position that the sadar lambardar is prima facie entitled to all the remuneration which he received under the old system requires re-consideration. In relying on s. 220 of the Land Revenue Act of 1917 the all important limitation implied in the words "so far as may be" seems to me to have been lost sight of.

While I am not, therefore, prepared at the present moment to differ definitely from the decision of Kinkhede, A. J. C., in the case quoted above, I think this matter is of sufficient importance to be considered by a Bench. The question involved is whether a sadar lambardar appointed under the Land Revenue Act of 1917 is entitled ipso facto to the remuneration which he received under the previous Land Revenue Act unless and until the Deputy Commissioner re-fixes or re-arranges such remuneration as between him and the other lambardars of the patti concerned. I accordingly order that the present appeal should be heard by a Bench consisting of Second A. J. C. and myself.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondent.

OPINION.

Findlay, Offg. J. C., and Kotval, A. J. C.—(December 17, 1925).—We have now heard this second appeal which was referred to us by the order of Findlay, O. J. C., dated the 9th September 1925. The plaintiff-respondent Daulat sued the defendant-appellant, Anandrao, for an amount of Rs. 466-2-6 said to be due under the following circumstances. Plaintiff is the sadar lambardar of Mauza Patansaongi which is divided into four pattis. Defendant is lambardar of Patti No. 3 while plaintiff is lambardar of Patti No. 1 and sadar lambardar of the whole village. Plaintiff claimed that Rs. 807-3-0 was due in respect of Government revenue for the Fasli year 1330, and he also claimed Rs. 384-0 on account of sadar lambardari hak for the years 1329-31 with interest. The total amount due came to Rs. 1,168-15-3 and deducting payments the amount of Rs. 466-2-6 was due. As regards Mauza Beed, plaintiff's allegation is that he owns eight-annas therein and the defendant the remaining eight annas, while plaintiff was sadar lambardar of the whole village for the years 1329 and 1330 only. Plaintiff claims that Rs. 82-4-0 on account of the Government revenue is due and Rs. 4-2-0 for sadar lambardari hak for each of the years 1329 and 1330. This makes a total of Rs. 90-8-0 of which Rs. 61-11-0 has been paid. Thus Rs. 36-8-0 inclusive of interest was due to plaintiff in respect of Mauza Beed. Deducting certain amounts admittedly due by plaintiff to the defendant as is clear from the judgment of the first Court, para. 3, a total of Rs. 359-8-0 was claimed in the present suit.

The dispute between the parties eventually centred round the question as to whether the plaintiff was entitled or not to the remuneration as sadar lambardar. It was urged on behalf of the defendant that at the very best the plaintiff could only claim the so-called sadar lambardari hak, if any, after it had been fixed by the Revenue Authorities under the Land Revenue Act of 1917, s. 192. Other pleas were raised between the parties with which we are not now concerned. On the question of the plaintiff's right to recover sadar lambardari hak the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the hak claimed by him, as under the new Land Revenue Act primary responsibility for the payment of land revenue rested on the sadar lambardar. The defendant Anandrao appealed to the Court of the District Judge, Nagpur, and the District Judge confirmed the decision of the Subordinate Judge. The District Judge took the view that under s. 188 (1) of the Land Revenue Act, 1917, some of the duties of the lambardar under the old Act are now to be performed by persons who are pattidars under the old Act and now are lambardars. Hence he did not assent to the proposition that the sadar lambardar under the new Act would be performing precisely the same duties and bearing the same responsibilities as a lambardar under the old Act. He, however, was of opinion that if the pattidar lambardars were dissatisfied with the arrangement whereby the sadar lambardars continued to get all the remuneration, their remedy was to apply to the Deputy Commissioner for re-fixation of the same.

The point at issue between the parties to this appeal is, therefore, comparatively simple. The defendant-appellant's position is that the sadar lambardar cannot claim the remuneration he does, in the present suit, until he has applied to the Revenue Authorities for a re-fixation or re-allocation of the remuneration. The plaintiff-respondent's position, on the other hand, is that the sadar lambardar is entitled to claim the remuneration he does, unless and until the other lambardars apply to the authorities and have the remuneration re-fixed or re-allocated. It is suggested that the sadar lambardar now represents the whole proprietary body in relation with Government; that the change in designation is only a matter of nomenclature and that where there is a sadar lambardar the other lambardar merely represents his patti, cf., Ramlal v. Budhram Prasad (2) and the same publication 1925, page 29 [Bhawani Sao v. Kesheo Rao (3).] For our own part we regard it as highly significant that in s. 192 of the Land Revenue Act, 1917, no specific mention of the remuneration of the sadar lambardar as such is contemplated. In r. 6 of the Rules made under s. 137 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1881, a definite standard as to the lambardar's remuneration was laid down. Section 192 of the new Land Revenue Act, on the other hand, contemplates the fixing of the remuneration by the Revenue Authorities,

(2) C. P. Rev. Rulings 1921, p. 40.

(3) C. P. Rev. Rulings 1925, p. 29.

We cannot see that any primary responsibility with reference to the payment of land revenue rests on the sadar lambardar under the new arrangement introduced by the Land Revenue Act of 1917. The sadar lambardar is defined in s. 2 (15) as "the particular lambardar appointed under this Act to represent the lambardars in their relations with Government." This only implies in this connection that he has to collect the land revenue from his fellow lambardars and pay it to Government along with the land revenue of his own patti. He is no more and no less liable than the other lambardars for any deficiency on the part of any of the lambardars.

The contention offered in this case on behalf of the sadar lambardar is that prima facie he as representing all the lambardars in their relations with the Government is entitled to the whole of the remuneration payable under the old Act to the lambardars. The present Land Revenue Act does not fix any remuneration for sadar lambardar as such. If he is entitled to any remuneration he is entitled to it only as one of the lambardars. There is nothing in the Land Revenue Act which suggests that, where there are more lambardars than one in a mahal, only the one who is the sadar lambardar is entitled to the whole of the lambardari remuneration payable under the old Act and that the other lambardars who also have duties and responsibilities laid on them are to get no part of it. If it is once conceded that the other lambardars may have a claim to some part of the remuneration and the sadar lambardar is not prima facie entitled to the whole of it, it follows that the one who comes into Court with a claim for it must prove the extent of the share to which he is entitled. This share can only be fixed by the Revenue Authority under s. 220 (v). The plaintiff, therefore, cannot maintain his claim for remuneration until he gets it fixed by the Revenue Authorities.

JUDGMENT.

Findlay, Offg. J. C.—(December 17, 1925).—The result of the reference to the Bench is that the plaintiff-respondent is not entitled to claim in this suit any remuneration as sadar lambardar. It follows that when the sadar lambardari hak is excluded, the claim of the plaintiff-respondent Daulat in the admission of

	Rs.	a.	p.
Government revenue of defendant's share for 1330 F. paid by plaintiff	807	3	0
Amount paid by defendant as admitted by plaintiff. (This includes Rs. 6 6-0 being kotwari dues of Kavadas village which plaintiff has allowed the defendant to charge in these accounts)	709	2	9

Beed village.

Government revenue of defendant's share for 1330 F. paid by plaintiff	82	4	0
Balance	20	9	0

The plaintiff is entitled to recover Rs. 98-0-3 plus Rs. 20-9-0, a total of Rs. 118-9-3. I see no reason to allow rest in this case for the plaintiff-respondent was to have gone to the Revenue Authority for re-fixation of the remuneration as between the lambardars instead of initiating suit on the vain pretext that he was entitled to the total remuneration. For the same reasons I order him to bear the defendant-appellant's costs in all three Courts. A decree will be drawn up accordingly and substituted for that passed by the first Court and confirmed by the lower Appellate Court. The cross-objection necessarily fails and is also dismissed. The respondent to bear his own costs therein.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 22nd April 1924, in Civil Appeal No 4 of 1924.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent, Abdul Rashid, sued the defendant-appellant, Musammât Khurshid Begam, for restitution of conjugal rights. Two other defendants were joined in the suit, the second defendant, Gulam Ahmad, being the husband of the elder sister of defendant No. 1's mother, and defendant No. 3, Abdul Sattar, being defendant No. 1's maternal uncle. The claim as laid was for a decree for restitution of conjugal rights against defendant No. 1, while an injunction was craved for against the other two defendants prohibiting them from restraining the appellant's wife from coming to his house and residing with him. The two last defendants, however, raised a preliminary objection that the suit was bad against them because of want of territorial jurisdiction, and this issue was decided against the plaintiff in a preliminary finding given on 29th September 1923 by the Subordinate Judge, as a consequence of which the suit proceeded against defendant No. 1 alone.

The main facts of the case are sufficiently clear from the first Court's judgment.

The Subordinate Judge gave the decree craved for against the first defendant and her appeal to the Court of the District Judge, Nagpur, also proved unsuccessful.

There are really two points only involved in the present appeal by the first defendant. The first is as to whether the decision in the previous suit of the Munsif, Wardha, (No. 55 of 1915), cf., the copy of the judgment (P. 1), was res judicata or not. In that suit the present appellant sought to question the validity of the marriage with her husband. The suit was dismissed by the Munsif. An appeal to the Court of the Additional District Judge, Wardha, also proved unsuccessful, and a second appeal to this Court was unconditionally withdrawn without permission to bring a fresh suit.

The District Judge in dealing with the present case, after a full consideration of the decisions reported as Bhugwanbutti Chowdhurani v. Forbes (1) and Bishnu Priya Chowdhurani v. Bhaba Sundari Debya (2) came to the conclusion that the decision in the previous suit operated as res judicata on the matter of the validity of the marriage we are concerned with.

It does not appear to me that either of these decisions is of very much help in the circumstances of the present case. In them the main question involved was whether a plaintiff can evade the provisions of s. 13 of the old C P C, by joining several causes of action against the same defendant in the subsequent suit and instituting it in a Court of superior jurisdiction. A similar remark applies to the decision in Sukhdeo v. Bhulari (3). As pointed out by the learned District Judge the point was fully considered in Ranganatham Chetty v. Lakshmu Ammal (4) by White, C. J. As the learned Chief Justice therein pointed out, two principles seem to emerge from the earlier decisions quoted by him. One is that the plaintiff cannot add causes of action to the original one for the purpose of swelling the amount of the valuation and then say the Original Court was incompetent to try this question. The other principle is that for the purpose of dealing with the question of res judicata it is open to the Court to split up, so to speak, the causes of action in the subsequent suit and if it be found that one of these causes of action is the same as the cause of action relied upon in the earlier suit, then although, taking all the causes of action together, the second suit may be said to be outside the jurisdiction of the Original Court, still if the specific question be within the jurisdiction of the Original Court and was determined by the Original Court, it is no answer to say that the whole suit is beyond its jurisdiction.

It has been urged on behalf of the defendant-appellant that the decisions relied on by the learned District Judge in coming to the conclusion he did on the question of res judicata were inapplicable. It is suggested that the previous Court had no jurisdiction to try this suit as framed and that, therefore, it was open to the defendant-appellant again to urge the factum of the invalidity of her marriage. The decision in Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (5) has been quoted in support of this position. But the facts of this case were peculiar and give very little help in the present instance, for their Lordships of the Privy Council did little more than enunciate the general principles of res judicata as laid down in s. 13 of the old C. P. C.

I have also been referred to the decision in Shibo Raut v. Baban Raut (6), but again there the facts of the case were highly peculiar and in a matter such as we are dealing with, the result of the application of the principle to the individual case must necessarily vary with the facts thereof.

For my own part with all deference I would have entertained some doubt as to the second principle enunciated by White, C. J., in the Sukhdeo v. Bhulai (3) quoted above. The language in which this second principle is enunciated, seems to me to be perhaps dangerously wide and, if taken too literally, would entail a risk of a conflict with the statutory provision contained in s. 11 of the C. P. C. It seems to me, however, entirely unnecessary in the circumstances of the present case to go further into this question for the simple reason that the present suit, after the second and third defendants had been discharged, became purely one for a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and the relief of injunction against the other two defendants was separately valued. The plaintiff accepted the position that the suit should be dismissed so far as the relief of injunction was concerned, and in those circumstances it seems to me perfectly clear that the Court in the previous suit would have been able to try this suit, in which the claim for restitution of conjugal rights is valued at Rs. 400 only.

I may add in this connection that the present suit, even as originally framed, could very well have been split up into two separate suits; one against the present appellant for restitution of conjugal rights, and the other against her co-defendants for the relief of injunction.

Although the appeal so far fails on the question of res judicata, it seems to me that both the lower Courts have wholly failed to give due consideration to another aspect of this case. It has been strongly urged before me that the relief claimed by the plaintiff-respondent was a discretionary one which it was open to the Court to refuse even though the validity of the marriage was established. The soundness of this proposition cannot be questioned. In the case of Muhammadans a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is in the nature of a suit for specific performance, being founded on a contract of marriage, which the Muhammadan Law regards as a civil one. Even, therefore, if the validity of the marriage be established, the relief of restitution of conjugal rights may be refused on such grounds as that its enforcement would be prejudicial or dangerous to the health, happiness or life of the wife: cf. Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsunnissa Begum (7). In Hamid Husain v. Kubra Begam (8) Piggot and Walsh, J.J., confirmed the dismissal of such a suit by the lower Court and in arriving at this decision one of the considerations taken into account was that the real reason for the bringing of the suit by the plaintiff was his desire to obtain possession of the defendant's property.

It has been suggested, however, on behalf of the respondent that no specific plea was taken on this issue by defendant No. 1. This is, however, incorrect. In para. 4 (h) of the defendant No. 1's written statement, dated 22nd October 1923, the following passage occurs:—

(5) 29 C. 707; 29 I. A. 196; 6 C. W. N. 525; 4 Bom. L. R. 793; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 323 (P. C.).

(8) 44 Ind. Cas. 729; 40 A. 332; 16 A. L. J. 132.

"Plaintiff and plaintiff's father and defendant are not also on good terms. There was much litigation between plaintiff and defendant and one execution case of the defendant is even now pending against the plaintiff, and so even if the alleged marriage be held proved and binding on the defendant, still it is impossible for the parties, i. e., plaintiff and defendant No. 1, to live together as husband and wife."

If this amounts to anything at all, it necessarily raised a matter which the lower Courts were bound fully to consider before granting the relief they did. As this matter will have to be the subject of enquiry by the Court below, it seems undesirable to go into details at present, but I may say that there is ample matter on the record to show that the plaintiff had been on the worst of terms with the defendant and her relations for years back. There was a struggle for possession of the moveable property and valuable immoveable property, and apparently in execution proceedings even a warrant of arrest had issued against the plaintiff. All these matters required full consideration before the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, should have granted the decree it did. It will have to be carefully considered whether, if a decree for restitution of conjugal rights is granted, there will be danger to the health, life or safety of the appellant, and the lower Appellate Court will also have to consider whether the suit has been brought for the bona fide purpose of obtaining the relief claimed therein, or whether the real object of the plaintiff is to obtain possession of the property, which has been the bone of contention between the parties for years past.

I accordingly remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for a finding on the following issues:—

(1) If a decree for restitution of conjugal rights is granted to the plaintiff-respondent, is there likely to be a danger to the life, health or safety of the defendant-appellant?

(2) Is there any other reason why the Court should not exercise its discretion in favour of plaintiff.

Should the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, find it necessary to consider the question of granting or refusing the relief claimed on any other relevant ground, the lower Appellate Court should take further pleadings from the parties in this connection, and if further evidence be necessary, it will be at liberty to have that evidence recorded by the Judge of the first Court, but the District Judge must in due course record his own findings on the points involved and submit them to this Court. The findings should reach this Court by 1st April and thereafter 15 days will be allowed for filing of objections thereto and the appeal will be finally heard on 15th April. The costs of this remand will follow the event.

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bellary, dated the 7th March 1923, in O. S No. 16 of 1921.

Mr A. Viswanatha Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Subbaroya Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is whether the Subordinate Judge's Court at Bellary had jurisdiction to try the suit. The suit was filed so far back as 5th March 1921 and the Subordinate Judge decided that the Court had no jurisdiction on the 7th March 1923. The defendant raised the question of jurisdiction in Issue No. 15. A preliminary issue like this should have been disposed of at the earliest opportunity. The learned Subordinate Judge did not do that, but after a number of witnesses were examined on commission and after the defendant took time to adduce evidence, he decided this question in favour of the defendant.

The suit is for dissolution of partnership. The plaintiff who is a resident of Bellary entered into partnership with the defendant, a resident of Coimbatore, for the purchase and sale of cotton. Under the arrangement they were to share the profits. It is unnecessary to consider what shares the plaintiff and defendant had in the partnership as it is a matter which has to be determined in the suit. The defendant admits that partnership arrangement was entered into and that the plaintiff and he were partners. But his contention is that the partnership business was carried on only in Coimbatore and not in Bellary and, therefore, the Court at Bellary had no jurisdiction. Under the arrangement the plaintiff was to purchase cotton not only at Bellary but in other places, but the sale of the cotton was to be effected at Coimbatore where cotton mills are situate. The accounts of the business were maintained at Bellary as alleged in para. 20 of the written statement. The defendant though he denied that the accounts were maintained in Bellary did not choose to say where the partnership accounts were maintained. His Vakil now says no accounts were necessary as it was arranged that the profits of each consignment should be settled at once. This is a very strange arrangement for settling accounts of a partnership in which very large consignments of cotton were made. Inasmuch as the defendant chooses to say that no accounts were kept by him at Coimbatore in connection with the partnership, it cannot be said that the partnership was carried on only at Coimbatore. The learned Subordinate Judge has evidently made a mistake in holding that the substantial portion of the business should be carried on at Bellary in order to give jurisdiction to the Bellary Court. Where partnership business is carried on at two places, the cause of action arises in both the places and the Courts have jurisdiction to entertain the suit for dissolution of partnership in either of these places. In this case both the Coimbatore as well as the Bellary Courts have jurisdiction to entertain the suit. This suit was filed in the Bellary Court. That Court had jurisdiction to try the case. serves at page 222* "As regards a suit of this nature, when it appears that the partnership business is carried on substantially in two or more places, I think that the cause of action does partly arise in each of those places within the meaning of s. 12 of our Charter". Their Lordships of the Privy Council attach importance in connection with the carrying on the business to the fact that the partnership accounts are kept at a particular place. In Luckmee Chund v. Zorawar Mull (2) their Lordships observe: "Where can it be said that the cause of action, supposing it exists for that balance, properly arose? Muttra was, undoubtedly, the central place of business; at Muttra the partnership books were kept; at Muttra the partners would have recourse to these books for the purpose of ascertaining the state of the transactions between them; and if, in the result, a balance was due to the appellants, Muttra would be the place where the payment of that balance would have to be made. It, therefore, appears to be clear to their Lordships that if there is a cause of action arising out of the balance resulting from these partnership transactions, the cause of action arose at Muttra". Here as already observed the books of the partnership were maintained by the plaintiff at Bellary. Therefore, the cause of action for a suit of this kind did arise within the jurisdiction of the Bellary Court. The Subordinate Judge has entirely gone out of his way in considering whether the accounts have been satisfactorily kept or not. That is a matter which will have to be dealt with when the suit is tried on the merits.

In the result we set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and direct him to restore the suit to file and proceed with it according to law. The respondent will pay the costs of the appeal.

C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920), s. 11 (2)—Occupancy

holding—Joint Hindu family—Inheritance—Survivorship

The word "inheritance" in s 11 of the C P Tenancy Act of 1920 does not exclude succession by survivorship [p. 917, col 2]

An occupancy holding held by the manager of a joint Hindu family on behalf of the family belongs to the family and passes by survivorship and not by inheritance [ibid]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Raipur, dated the 22nd January 1925, in Civil Appeal No. 166 of 1924.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It is found in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that "there was obviously no partition between Bisahu and Surit and that the latter was not separate from Bisahu in the sense that he relinquished all interest present or future in his father's property". The word partition seems to be used in the sense of a division of the property in which each of these two members of the joint family got exactly the share to which he was entitled by the Hindu Law and the relinquishment mentioned seems to be a relinquishment by Surit of a right to inherit his father's separate property if he should be the nearest heir at the time of his father's death.

We are not concerned with either matter. As a matter of fact the partition alleged, and completely proved by the pleadings of Surit himself in the suit of 1915 among other things, gave Surit a larger share than he was entitled to get in the joint family property. (It is, of course, absurd to talk of his share in his father's property, they were both members of a joint family, and each was entitled to an equal share in that property, not to any share in the other's share). In the partition of 1900 Surit was entitled to get one-ninth of the family property, but by remaining joint with his grandfather he became joint owner (to the extent of a half) of one-third, to say nothing of his right to take the other half of that one third by survivorship.

But, as has been said, it does not matter whether Surit got more or less than his proper share when there was a disruption of the joint family in 1900. What does concern us now is the undoubted fact that at that time Surit separated from his father and brother and the two latter remained joint, taking as their share or as part of their share in the family property the occupancy holding now in dispute.

Now ordinarily in the case of a lease taken by the manager of a joint Hindu family in his own name but with family funds and really on behalf of the whole family, it is universally accepted that the lease and the benefits of it belong to the whole family and if it is heritable it will pass by survivorship and not by inheritance, whatever the mutual rights and liabilities of the lessor and the members of the family other than the manager may be. But by some obscure process of reasoning which I have never discovered it is very commonly held that this does not apply to an occupancy holding. The idea has been exploded in Chudaman Singh v. Sakharam (1), Atmaram v. Lala (2) and I'agwa v. Budhram (3) but still persists.

The only argument that can possibly be advanced in favour of it is that in the Tenancy Act of 1920 the word inheritance only is used in reference to the devolution of an occupancy holding in s. 11, whereas in s 5 the expression used in respect of an absolute occupancy holding is "inheritance or survivorship", and s 46 of the Act of 1898 laid down that the right of an occupancy tenant on his death was to "devolve as if it were land". But if the word inheritance in s. 11 of the Tenancy Act, 1920, is to exclude succession by survivorship, we are forced to the impossibly absurd conclusion that the separated son of an occupancy tenant succeeds to his entire holding to the exclusion of his joint son.

But there is no question here of succession, either by inheritance or survivorship to a tenancy belonging, even as against the landlord alone, to the father separately. At the partition of 1900 the father and the son who remained joint with him were created co-tenants by the landlord of the one-third part of the entire holding belonging to the family which was allotted to them. The entry of the father's name alone in the revenue papers is merely evidence of the contrary, but it is very weak evidence and is overwhelmed by the other facts. The case is, therefore, merely one of two co-tenants succeeding by survivorship to the entire holding on the death of the other.

It may be mentioned that Surit's claim is unjust on his own pleadings, and even if we assume that there was no property belonging to the family in 1900 except the occupancy holding, which we are not entitled to do, and that the decree of 1915 giving Shirolal one-sixth of the holding was wrong which seems to be the case. On Surit's own showing he is now entitled to a quarter of the property owned by the family in 1900. But he got one-sixth from his grand-father, and he now claims (and has been given) one-sixth more, making one-third in all, while his brother Bisahu who is also entitled to a quarter gets only one sixth.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside and that of the first Court dismissing the suit will be restored. The plaintiff Surit will pay the whole of the costs of both parties in both Courts. The Pleader's fee in this Courts will be thirty rupees.

Under r. 37, Sch. IV to the Madras District Municipalities Act, the Government has the power to control the expenditure of Municipal funds by passing special orders prohibiting certain expenditure and expenditure incurred contrary to such orders is contrary to law and illegal, and a Local Fund Auditor is, therefore, entitled to surcharge the same on the person making, or authorising the making of, such expenditure under r. 60 (1) of Part II, Sch. IV to the Act. [p. 919, col. 1; p. 921, col. 1]

A Municipal Council decided to introduce the national system of education in all institutions under its management but the Government at the same time by order prohibited the use of Municipal funds for the maintenance of any school not recognised by Government. The Municipal Council thereupon resolved not to apply for fresh recognition as to schools controlled by them.

Held, that cheques issued by the Chairman of the Council upon Municipal funds for the purpose of maintaining such schools amounted to the illegal expenditure of Municipal funds, and that the Chairman was, therefore, liable to be surcharged in respect of the amount of cheques so issued by him. [p. 921, col. 1.]

An order of the Government signed by the Secretary to Government, Ministry of Local Self-Government, is none-the-less an order of the Governor-in-Council under r. 37 of Sch. IV to the Madras District Municipalities Act and in any case by virtue of s. 49 of the Government of India Act, an objection to the legality of Government orders on the ground of informality cannot be entertained by Civil Courts [p. 921, col. 2.]

Sections 22 and 13 of the Madras District Municipalities Act should be read together and subject to the limitation imposed by r. 37, Sch. IV to the Act, and a Municipal Chairman is, therefore, not bound to carry out illegal resolutions of the Council [p. 921, col. 1.]

The remedy by issue of writ of certiorari is not available in respect of wrong or illegal order of surcharge made under the Madras District Municipalities Act, since a substituted remedy therefor has been provided by r. 62 of Sch. IV to the Act. [p. 922, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

IN C. R. P. No. 165 OF 1923.

Odgers, J.—This is a petition to revise the order of the District Judge of Guntur confirming a surcharge order made by the Examiner of Local Fund Accounts (Ex. A) on the petitioner as Chairman of the Guntur Municipal Council. The ground for the surcharge is that the petitioner illegally issued cheques against the Municipal funds under the powers given him by r. 55 (1), Part II of Sch. IV of the Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920) for the maintenance of 25 Elementary Schools managed by the Guntur Municipal Council; such objects not being authorized objects under Act V of 1920. On 13th July 1921 the Guntur Municipal Council passed a resolution (Ex. 1) (a) to introduce the national system of education in all the institutions under the management of the Council, (b) to dispense with the annual grant by Government, (c) to conduct Municipal Primary Schools independently of Government control.

On 19th August 1921 (Ex. II) a Committee of the Guntur Municipal Council was appointed to formulate the methods of working the national system of education. The 25 Elementary Schools had been upto this date recognized by Government under the Educational Rules and Government had made a grant towards their maintenance. On 15th August 1921 Government issued 2 Government Orders, No. 1583 (Ex. IV) was issued under r. 37, Sch. IV of the Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920) as a special order. This Government order ran as follows:—

"No portion of a Municipal fund shall be applicable to the purpose of maintaining or aiding any educational institution which is not recognized or approved by the Government, the District Educational Council or any other authority duly authorized by the Government in this behalf to grant such recognition or approval."

"By order of the Government, Ministry of Local Self-Government"

It may be here stated that r. 37, Sch. IV of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, reads as follows:—

"The purposes to which the Municipal fund may be applied include all objects expressly declared obligatory or discretionary by-laws or rules, and in general everything necessary for, or conducive to the safety, health, convenience or education of the inhabitants or to the amenities of the Municipality and everything incidental to the administration; and the fund shall be applicable thereto within the Municipality subject to these rules and such further rules or special orders as the Governor-in-Council may prescribe or issue; and shall be applicable thereto without the Municipality if the expenditure is authorized by this Act, or specially sanctioned by the Governor-in-Council."

So the Municipal fund is applicable to these objects within the Municipality "subject to these rules and such further rules etc." The other Government Order No. 1584 (Ex. V) was an order on the resolution of the Guntur Municipal Council set out above and reads as follows.—

"Recorded. 2. The Government presume that the Municipal Council does not require any financial help from the Government for any purpose.

"(By order of the Government, Ministry of Local Self-Government)"

The Guntur Municipal Council considered on 14th October 1921 these Government Orders and on No. 1584 passed the following resolution: "This Council decided to dispense with Government grants only in regard to the National Schools, but it is inexpedient that the Government should put a wrong interpretation upon it and presume that the Council does not require financial help from them for any purpose. The Council is of opinion that under these circumstances, it is worthy only not to ask for financial help from the Government." Government Order No. 1583 they considered and merely recorded. They also considered a letter from the Inspector of Schools (Ex. IX) enquiring whether the Council intended to apply for recognition for the newly nationalized Elementary Schools and resolved that such recognition was unnecessary. On 22nd October 1921 the District Educational Council of Guntur met and adjourned a resolution (Ex. B) to withdraw recognition from the newly nationalized Elementary Schools "in accordance with Government Order No.

dated . . . . .". Previously on 8th October 1921 the Sub-Assistant Inspector of Schools informed the petitioner that he intended to inspect the schools of the Municipality "as per my annual programme of work." (Exhibit C) and on 27th October 1921 the Chairman issued a Memo (Ex. C-1) to Head Masters and Head Mistresses to that effect. The Inspector attended and extracts from his inspection book are Ex. E dated 31st October 1921. On 9th November 1921 Ex. VII Government drew the attention of the Guntur Municipal Council to Government Order No. 1583 (Ex. IV) and added,

"Since the Council has decided not to seek recognition for its schools, expenditure of Municipal funds on such schools is illegal."

That is the evidence on which the District Judge has come to the conclusion that as from the passing of Ex. I on 13th July 1921 the Municipal Schools ceased to be recognized by Government. The first contention addressed to us for the petitioner is that as these schools never ceased to be recognized they did not fall within the mischief of Government Order Nos. 1583 (Ex. IV) or 2208 (Ex. VII). The facts that the District Educational Council adjourned consideration of the resolution to withdraw recognition and that the schools were inspected as usual by the Government Inspector in October 1921 are cited to support this construction. It is to be observed that as regards the first of these that the District Educational Council proposed to act in accordance with a certain Government Order probably No. 1583 is referred to. If so, it is quite possible that the Council thought that any action on its part was unnecessary as Government had already treated these schools as unrecognized. That this latter is true there can be no doubt. It is perfectly clear from Ex. IV that Government rightly or wrongly purported not to recognize or approve the schools after the proceedings of the Guntur Municipal Council on 13th July 1921, cf., also Ex. IX. Exhibit IV clearly shows that Government assumed equal or superior powers to the District Educational Council to recognize or approve. Section 41 of Act VIII of 1920 (Elementary Education) is relied on to show that recognition of Elementary Schools is to be applied for through the Inspector to the District Educational Council, which is the recognising authority subject to an appeal to the Director of Public Instruction. Section 124, District Municipalities Act, makes the rules, etc., in Sch. IV part of the Act. Section 304 gives the Governor-in-Council power to amend or cancel the Schedule. Rule 37, Sch. IV, has been set out above and appears to me to give the Government a final control over the expenditure of the Municipality. It is said for the petitioner that so long as the aims of the latter are educative, Government has no control over the kind of education which is provided. The objects of expenditure of Municipal funds are set out in r. 40. The ways in which the Council may provide instruction are set out in r. 48. This and r. 47 (as to the duty of providing education generally) are part of Part II of the Schedule of which r. 37 (above) is the first rule and which sets out the authorized objects of expenditure. Reading these rules and s. 304 together, I feel no doubt that the clause "Subject to these rules, etc.," in r. 37 would also apply to control r. 48. Therefore Government cannot only refuse its own grant to schools of which it does not approve but can control the expenditure by the Municipality of such schools. I do not think the fact that a Government Inspection of these schools took place in accordance with the Sub-Assistant Inspector's programme—no doubt arranged long beforehand as indeed he states—has any bearing on the question. The Government did not wish to proceed to extremes and it was not till 9th November 1921 (Ex. VII) that they definitely pointed out that expenditure on the schools was illegal. It appears to me that recognition is a matter of assent on both sides. Government must accept recognition and the Educational Authority must desire it. As soon as either side withdraws, recognition is at an end. This is not an appeal. It is not necessary for me to say whether on the evidence I should have come to the same conclusion as the District Judge but it appears to me there is evidence on which the District Judge could come to the conclusion he did with regard to this matter, viz., that the schools were unrecognized at any rate at the date from which the surcharge begins, viz., 10th August 1921.

The next point is as to the liability of the Chairman petitioner. It is said that under s. 22 of the District Municipalities Act the Chairman was bound to give effect to the resolution of the Council of 13th July 1921. Section 13 lays down the general duties of the Chairman. By s. 13 (c) he is to carry into effect the resolutions of the Council and by s. 13 (e) the Chairman of the Municipal Council shall "perform all the duties and exercise all the powers specifically imposed or conferred on the Chairman by this Act, and subject, whenever it is hereinafter expressly so provided, to the sanction of the Council, and subject to all other restrictions, limitations and conditions hereinafter imposed, exercise the executive power for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act, and be directly responsible for the due fulfilment of the purposes of this Act." The power of signing cheques on Municipal funds is given to the Chairman by r. 55 (1) of Sch. IV. By rr. 56 to 62, the audit of accounts is controlled. By r. 60 the auditors are to charge against any person making or authorising the making of an illegal payment. Rule 62 provided that the Chairman shall apply to the Court for payment of any sum certified as surcharged and it is said that this cannot apply to a case where the Chairman is surcharged himself. It no doubt applies where the Chairman recovers from other members or from a former Chairman as might be done in this case. Section 353 of the Act renders the Chairman as well as the other members liable for loss, waste or misapplication of Municipal money. On the other hand it is said that s. 22 is opposed to s. 13 (e) where the words "subject to all other restrictions, limitations and conditions hereinafter imposed" occur. This would bring in the restrictions already referred to in r. 37, Sch. IV. It is perfectly clear to my mind that the Chairman is as liable as any member for misapplication of moneys. It may be hard that he be rendered so liable because he was merely carrying out a resolution of the Council though I think it is on record that he voted for that resolution himself. I think s. 13 (e) and rr. 37 and 55 (i) apply to this case. The Chairman cannot be obliged to carry out illegal resolutions and s. 22 provides that he is relieved from carrying out a resolution modified, suspended or cancelled by a controlling authority. If the resolution of 13th July 1921 is to be construed as authorizing him to spend Municipal money on the schools after the Council had dispensed with Government aid and control, it may be said that resolution was afterwards cancelled by a controlling authority; there are, however, no specific words to this effect in the resolution and there does not appear to be any subsequent resolution to that effect. The Chairman signed the cheques and as I have already found he did so for an illegal purpose. He is, therefore, in my opinion liable—whether he has any remedy or not against the other members is of course not open to discussion here.

A third point is raised for the petitioner. It has not been taken below. That is that the Government orders were signed thus by the Secretary to Government. "By order of the Government, Ministry of Local Self-Government." It is of course well-known that education is a transferred subject under s. 45-A, cl. (1), sub-cl.

(d) of the Government of India Act which came into force on 17th December 1920. The date of the District Municipalities Act is 29th June 1920. It is said that r. 37 of Sch. IV of the District Municipalities Act provides that the 'special orders' must be prescribed or issued by the Governor-in-Council and that as these Government orders were signed as set out above they are invalid as they do not conform to this express statutory provision. Section 49 of the Government of India Act provides as follows: "All orders and other proceedings of the Government of a Governor's province shall be expressed to be made by the Government of the province and shall be authenticated as the Governor may by rule direct, so, however, that provision shall be made by rule for distinguishing orders and other proceedings relating to transferred subjects from other orders and proceedings."

"Orders and proceedings authenticated as aforesaid shall not be called into question in any legal proceeding on the ground that they were not duly made by the Government of the province."

In my opinion this provision was made expressly to meet a case like this and must be taken to override the provision in r. 37. There is thus no substance in this objection. These are the points raised in the civil revision petition and, in my opinion, they all fail and the civil revision petition must be dismissed with costs.

C. M. P No. 3407 of 1922.

This relates to the same subject-matter and is a petition for the issue of a writ of certiorari to bring in and quash the auditor's order of surcharge referred to in my judgment in Civil Revision Petition No. 165 of 1923.

That this remedy is open under the English procedure is undoubted. The Public Health Act, 1875, s. 247 (8) provides that "any person aggrieved by disallowance made under (7) (surcharges) may apply to the Court of Queen's Bench, for a writ of certiorari to remove the disallowance into the said Courts," etc., cf., R. v. Carson Roberts (1) and R. v. Roberts, Scurr, Ex parte (2). The question is—Is such a remedy open under the District Municipalities Act Sch. IV, r. 60 corresponds to the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 247 (7), but sub-s. (8) of the Statute runs as already set out above, whereas r. 61 runs thus "any person aggrieved by disallowance, surcharge or charge made may, within fourteen days after he has received or been served with the decision of the auditor, apply to the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction to set aside such disallowance, surcharge or charge and the Court after taking such evidence as is necessary, may confirm, modify or remit such disallowance, surcharge or charge with such orders as to costs as it may think proper in the circumstances; or in lieu of such application any person so aggrieved may appeal to the Governor-in-Council who shall pass such orders as he thinks fit."

Rule 62 corresponds generally with s. 247 (9). It seems to me, therefore, that the remedy by certiorari in this particular matter is not open under the District Municipalities Act and that a substituted remedy has been provided in that Act for the remedy by certiorari given by the Statute. Therefore whatever may be or may not be the general powers of the Court to issue this writ, it seems to me that that power, if it ever existed in the present case has been by implication removed by the Act, which provides another, and specified remedy. Further even if the power exists in the present case, no prima facie case has, in my opinion, been made out for its exercise by us.

The petition must be dismissed with costs.

IN C. R. P. No. 165 OF 1923.

Madhavan Nair, J.—The facts necessary for the discussion of this civil revision petition and the civil miscellaneous petition are fully set out in my learned brother's judgment with which I agree.

The civil revision petition is against the order of the District Judge of Guntur refusing to set aside the order made by the Examiner of Local Fund Accounts, Madras surcharging the petitioner—the Chairman of the Guntur Municipality—with Rs. 1,771 6-0. The surcharge certificate was issued by the first respondent under r. 60 (1) of Sch. IV, of the Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920) which empowers every Auditor to "disallow every item contrary to law and surcharge the same on the person making, or authorizing the making of, the illegal payment." The case against the petitioner as mentioned in the surcharge certificate is that "he issued cheques against the Municipal funds on different dates between the 10th of August 1921 and the 31st of October 1921 for amounts aggregating to Rs. 1,771-6-0 towards the salaries of teachers and for expenses in connection with the maintenance of 25 educational institutions within the Municipality, contrary to special orders issued by the Government under r. 37 of Part II of Sch. IV of the District Municipalities Act, which made such payments illegal. The Guntur Municipal Council, by its resolution dated the 13th of July 1921, Ex. I, decided to introduce (1) the national system of education in all the institutions under the management of the Council, (2) to dispense with the annual grant by the Government and (3) to conduct the Municipal Primary Schools independently of Government Control. On the 10th of August 1921 the Government passed the following Government Order No. 1583 (Ex. IV) under r. 37, Sch. IV of the District Municipalities Act (V of 1920) as a special order and communicated it to all Chairmen of Municipal Councils including the Chairman of the Guntur Municipal Council: "No portion of a Municipal fund shall be applicable to the purpose of maintaining or aiding any educational institution which is not recognised or approved by the Government, the District Educational Council or any other authority duly authorised by the Government in this behalf to grant such recognition or approval.

(By order of the Government, Ministry of Local Self-Government) (Sd.) F. J. Richards,
Secretary of Government."

On the same date, reading the resolution of the Municipal Council, Ex. I, the Government communicated to the Chairman, Government Order No. 1584 (Ex. V) in which it was stated that "The Government presume that the Municipal Council does not require any financial help from the Government for any purpose." On the 9th of November 1921 the Government passed and communicated to the Guntur Municipal Council, Government Order No. 2208 (Ex. VII) in which, after drawing its attention to Ex. IV, the Government stated that "Since the Council has decided not to seek recognition for its schools, expenditure of Municipal funds on the said schools is illegal." The question for our decision is whether the expenditure of Municipal fund by the Chairman on the educational institutions mentioned in the surcharge certificate subsequent to Ex. IV is illegal.

Three arguments have been advanced before us by Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer on behalf of the petitioner; (1) since the schools in question, which were already recognised schools (i. e., prior to Ex. I), never ceased to be recognised, they did not fall within the ban of Government Order No. 1583 or of any other Government order passed in connection with this matter and, therefore, the expenditure of Municipal funds on such schools is not illegal; (2) according to law, the Chairman of a Municipality is not liable to be surcharged for making illegal payments; and (3) Government Order No. 1583 and the other Government orders issued by the Government are not valid orders as they were not issued by the Governor-in-Council, as required under r. 37, Part II, Sch. IV, of the District Municipalities Act. I shall examine these arguments separately.

(1) The 25 educational institutions under the control of the Guntur Municipality were "recognised institutions," prior to the passing of the Madras Elementary Education Act, (VIII of 1920). After the Elementary Education Act came into force these continued to remain as recognised institutions, (see s. 41, cl. (iv) of the Act) and the power to withdraw recognition or to confer it afresh was vested by the Act in the District Educational Council. It is argued by the learned Vakil for the petitioner that the Government had, therefore, no power to withdraw the recognition already conferred upon the schools and, since the District Educational Council did not specifically withdraw the recognition consequent upon the passing of the resolution Ex. I, the expenditure of the Municipal fund on these institutions is not illegal.

¶ The various resolutions of the Council and the Government Orders passed by the Government are referred to in detail in my learned brother's judgment. I have no doubt that by Ex. IV the Government purported not to recognise or approve of the Municipal Schools after the Council had passed the resolution dated the 13th of July 1921, Ex. I. In pursuance of it the Government on the same date communicated to the Municipality the order Ex. V in which they presumed that the Municipality did not require any financial help. The proceedings set out in my learned brother's judgment show clearly that the order of the Government passed on the 10th of August 1921 was understood as an order withdrawing recognition and prohibiting the expenditure of the Municipal fund on the schools in question which ceased to be recognised on that date. The intention of the Government was, however, made absolutely clear by Ex. VII which clearly declared that expenditure of Municipal fund on the said schools was illegal. In my opinion, it is not necessary for the purpose of this case, to consider whether, after the passing of the Madras Elementary Education Act (VIII of 1920) the Government still had the power of granting recognition to the Elementary Schools or withdrawing it from them; that the Government thought that it still had the power to grant recognition for the Municipal Secondary Schools is clear from its order Ex. VI, Government Order No. 1942, dated the 5th of October 1921, which is to the following effect: In Government Order No. 1583, L. & M. dated 10th August 1921, the Government issued a special order under r. 37 of Sch. IV of the Madras District Municipalities Act 1920, prohibiting the expenditure of Municipal funds on educational institutions which are not recognised or approved by the Government, the District Educational Council or any other authority duly authorised by the Government in this behalf to grant such recognition or approval. Under s. 41 of the "Madras Elementary Education Act, 1920" District Educational Councils are empowered to grant recognition to Municipal Elementary Schools. The Government are now pleased to authorise the Director of Public Instruction to grant recognition for Municipal Secondary Schools for the purpose of this order. Rightly or wrongly the Government purported to withdraw the recognition of the Elementary Schools in question and consequently passed orders prohibiting expenditure on those schools. The real question to be considered is whether the Government have the power to control the expenditure of Municipal funds by passing special orders prohibiting expenditure. If such power is vested in the Government—whether the exercise of it in any particular case is justifiable or not—it is clear that expenditure contrary to such orders will be contrary to law and illegal, and the Auditor will, therefore, be entitled to surcharge the same on the person making, or authorising the making of, such expenditure under r. 60 (1) of Part II, Sch. IV. Rule 37, of Part II, Sch. IV of the Madras District Municipalities Act provides that, "The purposes to which the Municipal fund may be applied include all objects expressly declared obligatory or discretionary by-laws or rules, and in general everything necessary for, or conducive to the safety, health, convenience or education of the inhabitants or to the amenities of the Municipality and everything incidental to the administration; and the fund shall be applicable thereto within the Municipality subject to these rules and such further rules or special orders as the Governor-in-Council may prescribe or issue." Section 124 of the Act makes the rules and tables embodied in Sch. IV as part of Chap. VI which relates to Taxation and Finance. Under s. 304, "The Governor-in-Council may make rules altering, adding to, or cancelling Sch. II, Sch. V, Sch. VI or Part II of Sch. IV." According to the District Municipalities Act, the expenditure of the Municipal fund is limited to purposes including "education" specified in r. 37 and referred to in detail in the subsequent rules and the "fund is to be applied thereto within the Municipality subject to these rules and such further rules or special orders as the Governor-in-Council may prescribe or issue." This makes it clear that the Government can prohibit by passing special orders the expenditure of the Municipal fund on schools of which it does not approve, it, therefore, follows, that the payments made by the Municipal Chairman for defraying the expenses of these schools subsequent to the 10th of August 1921 are illegal, inasmuch as they were made contrary to Government orders prohibiting such expenditure. The Auditor was, therefore, rightly entitled, under r. 60 (1) of Part II, Sch. IV of the District Municipalities Act, to surcharge the amount on the person making, or authorizing the making of such illegal payments.

The second question for consideration is as regards the liability of the Chairman of the Municipality. Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer's argument to show that the Chairman is not liable to be surcharged is based on ss. 13 (c), 22, 40 (1) and r. 62 of Sch. IV of the District Municipalities Act. According to s. 13, cl. (c) "The Chairman of the Municipal Council shall carry into effect the resolutions of the Council." Section 22 stated that "The Chairman shall be bound to give effect to every resolution of the Council unless such resolution is modified, suspended or cancelled by a controlling authority." Section 40 (1) lays down that "The Governor-in-Council may, by notification, remove any Chairman, if he, without an excuse sufficient in the opinion of the Governor-in-Council, omits or refuses to carry out any resolution of the Municipal Council". These sections should show that the Chairman of a Municipality is bound to carry out the resolutions of the Municipal Council and, if he refuses to do so, he is liable to be removed by the Governor-in-Council. If so, it is argued that he is not liable to be surcharged for giving effect to the resolution dated the 13th of July 1921. This argument is sought to be supported by an inference drawn from r. 62. This rule provides that "Every sum certified to be due from any person by auditors under this Act shall be paid by such person to the Chairman within 14 days after the intimation to him of the decision of the auditors unless within that time such person has appealed to the Court or to the Governor-in-Council against the decision; and such sum if not so paid, or such sum as the Court or the Governor-in-Council shall declare to be due, shall be recoverable on an application made by the Chairman to the Court in the same way as an amount decreed by the Court." It is pointed out that since this rule makes provision for Chairman to recover from persons sums certified to be due from them by the auditor, it is to be understood that the Act does not contemplate that the Chairman is liable to be surcharged by the auditor. In reply to this argument the learned Government Pleader relies on s. 13, cl. (e) and points out that the suggested inference of the non-liability of the Chairman does not follow from r. 62. Section 13, cl. (e) states that the Chairman of the Municipal Council shall "perform all the duties and exercise all the powers specifically imposed or conferred on the Chairman by this Act, and, subject, whenever it is hereinafter expressly so provided, to the sanction of the Council, and subject to all other restrictions, limitations and conditions hereinafter imposed, exercise the executive power for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act, and be directly responsible for the due fulfilment of the purposes of this Act." The words "subject to all other restrictions, limitations and conditions hereinafter imposed" introduce the restriction referred to in r. 37 and thus impose limitations on the Chairman's duty to carry out the resolutions of the Council. I think ss. 22 and 13 of the Act should be read together and subject to the limitation imposed by r. 37; and, if so read, it would follow that the payments made by the Chairman in this case in carrying out the resolution of the Council dated the 13th of July 1921 in view of the special orders of the Government prohibiting the expenditure of the Municipal fund would be illegal payments, and as he was the person who made such illegal payments by issuing cheques under r. 55 (1), Sch. IV of the Act, the auditor would be entitled to surcharge him for making such illegal payments, r. 62, Sch. IV of the Madras District Municipalities Act does not warrant the inference that the Chairman is not liable to be surcharged. The rule only points out how the Chairman may recover the surcharged amount. Under that rule a Chairman may recover, in the way indicated therein, the surcharged amount from any person from whom the sum is certified to be due by the auditor under the Act including a former Chairman as in this case. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Chairman of a Municipality is liable to be surcharged under the Act for making illegal payments.

The third and the last argument addressed on behalf of the petitioner relates to the form of the Government order. The Government orders in question were issued "By order of the Government, Ministry of Local Self-Government" and signed by the "Secretary to Government". Under r. 37, Sch. IV of the District Municipalities Act, "further rules or special orders referred to therein should be prescribed or issued by the Governor-in-Council". It is argued that, since the Government orders in this case were issued "By order of the Government, Ministry of Local Self-Government and not by the Governor-in-Council", the Government orders are invalid as they do not conform to the express statutory provision contained in the District Municipalities Act. There is no force in this contention. The District Municipalities Act was passed on the 29th of June 1920 and the Government of India Act came into force in Madras by notification on the 17th of December 1920. Under s. 45A, cl. (1), sub cl (d) of the Government of India Act, education has been made a "transferred subject". Section 46 (1) provides that the Presidency of Fort St. George shall be governed, in relation to reserved subjects, by a Governor-in-Council and in relation to transferred subjects, by the Governor acting with ministers appointed under the Act. Section 49 (1) of the Government of India Act lays down that "all orders and other proceedings of the Government of a Governor's province shall be expressed to be made by the Government of the province and shall be authenticated as the Governor may by rule direct, so, however, that provision shall be made by rule for distinguishing orders and other proceedings relating to transferred subjects from other orders and proceedings". The Government orders in question have been authenticated as mentioned in this section. It is stated in the same section that "Orders and proceedings authenticated as aforesaid shall not be called into question in any legal proceeding on the ground that they were not duly made by the Government of the province." In view of this provision, the objection that the Government orders in this case are invalid as they do not conform to the statutory provision of the District Municipalities Act cannot any longer be entertained in any legal proceeding and must be overruled.

In the result, I agree that this civil revision petition should be dismissed with costs.

IN C. M. P. No. 3407 OF 1922.

This civil miscellaneous petition has been filed for the issue of a writ of certiorari to bring in and quash the certificate of surcharge made by the auditor. Reliance has been placed by the learned Vakil for the petitioner on the decisions in R. v. Carson Roberts (1) and R v Roberts, Scurr, Ex parte (2) to show that in England such writs are issued for quashing surcharge orders. Those decisions are under the English Public Health Act, 1875, which contains provisions relating to surcharge and also provides for applications by aggrieved persons to the Court of King's Bench for writs of certiorari to remove their disallowance in the said Court (see s. 247, cls. (7), 8 and (9)). The rules in the District Municipalities Act relating to surcharge seem to be framed on the analogy of the provisions of the English Public Health Act with this important difference that for the statutory remedy by way of certiorari provided for in s. 247, cl. (8) of the English Act, the Indian Act by r. 61 substitutes application to the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction, or in lieu of such application, appeal to the Governor-in-Council as remedies of persons aggrieved by surcharge orders (see r. 61). The English decision being based upon a specific provision of the English Public Health Act which provides for the making of applications for writs of certiorari, are not of much use in considering the question arising under the Indian Act which does not provide for any such applications. On the other hand, the absence of such a provision in our Act coupled with the substitution of another provision in its place rather suggests that the Legislature thereby intended that this remedy should not be open to aggrieved persons under the District Municipalities Act. Writs of certiorari are not generally granted when other equally efficacious remedies exist under the law for the satisfactory redress of the grievances complained of. Such being the case, the petitioner is not entitled to ask for the issue of a writ. I have already shown, in my judgment, in the civil revision petition that he has not succeeded in showing that the order of the learned District Judge is wrong. I do not say anything about the general powers of this Court to issue writs of certiorari in relation to such matters as we are now considering; nor do I express any opinion on the question whether the general power of this Court to issue the writ, if it ever existed in the present case, could be taken away by implication by the District Municipalities Act. I may also state that it has not been argued with reference to authorities whether this very ancient remedy, which is the ordinary process by which the High Court brings up for examination the Acts of bodies of inferior jurisdiction and which is frequently spoken of as being applicable only to "judicial acts" and not to purely ministerial acts [see R. v. Woodhouse (3)] does exist in respect to certificates of surcharge made by auditors.

I agree that this petition also should be dismissed with costs.

MISCELLANEOUS APPEAL No. 10 OF 1925.
September 18, 1925.

Present :—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C.
GAURA TELIN—DEFENDANT No. 1
—APPELLANT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, rr. 2, 16, 17—Pleadings, contents of—Pleas of law, whether can be raised—Amendment, when should be allowed—New plea contradictory to old, whether sufficient ground for rejection—C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920), s. 11—Tenant, death of—Distant heir of deceased tenant in occupation—Malguzar, whether can eject.

It is the duty of a Court, whether with or without the help of the parties and their Pleaders, to discover for itself and to apply the law applicable to the facts pleaded and proved. In a pleading, therefore, facts alone must be stated and pleas of law must be excluded. [p. 927, col. 1.]

A point of law, provided it is a point that can be applied to the facts proved, although it directly contradicts anything that may have been said during the whole case about the law applicable to those facts, can be urged by the parties at any time before judgment is pronounced and it can form the basis of the decision of the case even if it occurs only to the Judge himself when he is writing his judgment. [ibid.]

Order VI, r. 16, C. P. C., does not limit the period when a plea must be taken, it bars only pleas that are irrelevant or scandalous or may tend to prevent a fair trial of the case. [p. 927, col. 2.]

A Court is bound to allow an amendment under O. VI, r. 17, C. P. C., if it is necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy between the parties. [ibid.]

A Court has no power to refuse to allow an amendment of pleadings for any reason except those mentioned in r. 16 of O. VI, C. P. C., which do not include a contradiction between the new pleading and the old. [ibid.]

Under the C.P. Tenancy Act a malguzar being in the position of the very last reversioner is not entitled to eject a distant heir of a deceased tenant on the ground that he has no right to succeed to the holding as there are nearer heirs of the tenant in existence. [p. 928, col. 1.]

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—A great part of the welter of documents filed in this case as "written statements" is taken up with propositions of law and arguments on them. That is expressly forbidden by the C. P. C. The putting in of such pleadings and the mistakes made in deciding them in this case are based on the common idea that a Court is not bound to consider, or rather is bound not to consider, any view of the law in respect of the facts before it except such as is laid before it formally by the parties or their Pleadings, if they happen to have any, and further is required to answer nothing but yes or no to any plea of law that may be taken. It is the duty of the Court, whether with or without the help of the parties or their Pleadings, to discover for itself and to apply the law applicable to the facts pleaded and proved. Practically every rule of Os. VI and VII of the C. P. C., particularly r. 2 of O. VI, shows that in any "pleading", that is to say any plaint or written statement, facts alone must be stated and pleas of law must be excluded.

A point of law, provided it is a point that can be applied to the facts proved and although it directly contradicts anything that may have been said during the whole case about the law applicable to those facts, can be urged by the parties at any time before judgment is pronounced, and it can be the basis of the decision of the case even if it occurs only to the Judge himself when he is writing his judgment. There are several instances of this having been done in the finding given by the learned Subordinate Judge himself on the 25th of July 1924 when he held that the malguzar was entitled to eject Jairam because there were nearer heirs than Jairam in existence. This, as is well-known, can be done not only in the first Court but in the Appellate Court and even in second appeal.

What has all through the case been called an amendment of the pleadings was nothing but a fresh suggestion of one of the legal inferences to be drawn from the pleadings, which under r. 2 of O. VI must be confined to facts. In his order refusing to allow this amendment the learned Subordinate Judge has in effect admitted that, even if it had been an amendment of a real "pleading", that is a statement of fact, he had no power to refuse it under r. 16 of O. VI, and that he was bound to allow it under r. 17. He writes : "Had the defendants applied for this amendment before the case of defendant No. 2 was adjudicated upon I would have had no hesitation to permit the defendants to take these pleas, but after adverse decision has been passed against defendant No. 2 I do not permit such an amendment. I have ample power under O. VI, r. 16, Civil Procedure to strike out such a plea even if it was already made."

But r. 16 says nothing about a plea being taken at any particular stage of the case, or before or after the decision of any other plea, it speaks only of pleas that are irrelevant or scandalous or may tend to prevent a fair trial of the case. This plea was certainly neither irrelevant nor scandalous, and that it was not of the last of these three classes but that, on the contrary, its rejection might tend to prevent a fair trial of the case is admitted over again in the following words, which follow those just quoted. "Even taking into account the grave hardships that my refusal may cause to the defendants I cannot permit parties to play a game of Hide and Seek". That is to say, not only that the refusal might tend to prevent a fair trial, but also that the amendment was necessary for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy between the parties, the right to possession of the land; the Court was, therefore, bound to allow it under r. 17.

In this case practically all the facts on which the defendants now seek to rely as a basis for the legal inference that they were co-tenants with Iliria were stated in the very first written statement filed by Gaura before Jairam was ever made a party, and they were stated again with greater detail in the first written statement filed by the two defendants jointly. As has been shown the Court has no power to refuse to allow an amendment of a pleading, even using that word in its proper meaning of pleas of fact, for any reason except those mentioned in r. 16 of O. VI, which do not include a contradiction between the new pleading and the old. Anyhow why should a party be prevented from taking a new plea of fact inconsistent with facts already pleaded? He does it at his own risk. If the pleas are contradictory they work out their own retribution by disproving each other to the extent of that contradiction and of the party's knowledge of them.

In this view of the matter the order of the lower Appellate Court that neither defendant can resist the claim to the occupancy holding is also wrong. The admission to that effect might be considered to be an admission of unstated facts which would defeat that claim, though it is obviously no such thing. But if it is the defendants can now deny those facts and can prove that denial. If they did actually admit them to be true in the first place, that will make their disproof of them so much the more difficult.

Gaura alone has appealed but Jairam is a respondent supporting the appeal, and the order of the lower Appellate Court can be altered, under r. 33 of O. XLI, in respect of the case against him also. The decision that the malguzar can eject Jairam because there are nearer heirs than Jairam in existence will be seen to be impossible if it is considered what the decision would have been if a nearer heir than Jairam, but not the nearest, had taken possession and Jairam had sued to eject him; the malguzar is merely the last reversioner and comes after Jairam.

The idea that the malguzar holds some position other than that of the very last reversioner, which runs all through the decision, is exemplified in an oral statement by the plaintiff's Pleader in which, with reference to the heirs nearer than Jairam, he said: "The right of these nearer heirs is barred by the adverse possession of the defendants and the plaintiff as a landlord can eject the defendants". If the right of the nearer heirs was extinguished, so and even more so was that of the more distant reversioner. Also if the parties are to be held down to anything of that sort they or their Pleaders may say, the suit ought to have been dismissed on that plea; it is a statement of fact that the possession of the defendants had been of such a character and such duration that the right of even the true owners had been extinguished.

The whole of that part of the order of the lower Appellate Court which restricts the scope of the fresh trial of the suit must, therefore, be set aside. The first Court will take such fresh pleadings of facts from the parties as may seem necessary; there can be few if any not already taken. On those pleadings it must frame issues first in respect of any fact alleged by one party and denied by the other, and then in respect of all the possible legal effects of the facts admitted or found proved on the right of either Gaura or Jairam or both to remain in possession of the absolute occupancy holding or of the occupancy holding or of both. All the costs in both Appellate Courts with the exception of the Court-fees on the two petitions of appeal, will be paid by the respondent Shriram Bhojer.]

Another matter to be mentioned in regard to the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is that the learned Judge considered that the defendants were to blame for the necessity for the appeal, in which I cannot agree with him, and proceeded, therefore, to "order no refund of the Court-fees paid in appeal, and direct that the whole costs of the appeal be borne by the appellants." Reference to s 13 of the Court Fees Act will show that this order is not only wrong but of no effect. If the defendants, who were the appellants in that Court, apply to the District Judge for "a certificate authorising them to receive back from the Collector the full amount of fee paid on the memorandum of appeal" he is bound to grant it. A certificate for the refund of the Court-fees in this Court will issue to the appellant.

(DIED) AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS

NOS. 1 TO 6, DEFENDANTS NOS. 3 AND 4, LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF PLAINTIFFS NOS. 1 AND 2
AND OF DEFENDANT NO. 3—APPELLANTS

RY. SIWAJI RAJA SAHEB AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS NOS. 1, 2 AND 6 TO 21—
RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Religious endowment—Succession to trusteeship—Usage—Management by single individual—Confiscation by State and re-grant, effect of, on rule of succession—Widow—Acquired property, whether stridhanam or accretion to estate—Inheritance—Illegitimate son of sudia, right of, to inherit to father's collaterals.

The Rajahs of Tanjore had time after time endowed and founded certain devasthanams and other charities. These had continued in the possession and management of the Rajah for the time being and till the death of the last ruler, the office was always held by a single individual. After the death of the last ruler in 1855, when the Raj itself was seized by the East India Company as an act of State, the Pagodas and the devasthanams were also taken in possession of and managed by the Government. In 1863, K, the senior widow of the late Rajah, applied for and got possession of the devasthanams and other trust properties as the head of the family, but the course of succession was not indicated in the Government's order of restoration. On her death, the trust estate was managed by the widow who in turn became the senior Rani and so on until the last of the Ranis died in 1912. Disputes then arose between the illegitimate sons of the late Rajah and the sons of an adopted son as to succession both as to the private estate of the Rajah and as to the management of the trust. The private estate was directed to be partitioned. On the question of the rule of succession to the trust estate

Held, that since the founders of the institutions intended that their successors who occupied the Raj should continue to have the sole management of the temples and pagodas and the endowments attached to them and since the Government by restoring the properties to the Rani as "head of the family for the time being" indicated their intention that they should continue to be managed by a sole trustee, the trusteeship was not liable to be divided and the elder grandson was solely entitled to the trusteeship of the devasthanams and the charities [p 932, col 1]

A Hindu widow has an absolute right of disposal over the income of the property which she inherits from her husband. She can either spend the same or accumulate it for her own benefit. In cases where she purchases properties or invests her savings and indicates by her conduct an intention that the properties purchased out of her savings should form part of her husband's estate, such savings should follow the same rules as regards devolution to her husband's estate, and should be treated as accretions to the estate. Where she does not do so, she has absolute powers of disposal over such property and can sell or give the same to anybody she pleases without any right of the reversioners to question her alienations. Where the question is one of intention to be deduced or inferred from her conduct, the presumption is that she intends to keep the property for her own absolute benefit and to have absolute powers of disposal over it. Where, however, a widow is not in possession of her husband's estate, there is no presumption that any of the properties which she gets are to be treated as accretions to her husband's estate. On her death such properties would follow the same course of succession as her stridhanam properties [p 938, col 2, p 939, col 1]

Under the Hindu Law an illegitimate son of a sudra is not an heir to his putative father's collateral relations and can have no right to succeed to the stridhanam of his father's widows who were married in an approved form. [p. 933, col. 1]

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J—In cases of succession to religious institutions, the main question to be considered is what is the usage of the institutions; and where from the date of the foundation of the charities up to the date of the suit, the trust was managed by a single individual who was the head of the family not in possession of any partible property, the office must be treated as impartible and not liable to be held by more than one person at a time. [p 935, col 2]

In cases of confiscation and re-grant of property which is impartible, the law is that in the absence of anything in the re-grant, the property which is re-granted is subject to the old incident of impartibility. [ibid.]

There is no distinction as to the nature of the estate taken between property inherited by a woman from a male and property inherited from a female. In both the cases she takes not an absolute estate but only a qualified one [p 939, col. 2.]

Per Spencer, J—It is a question of fact in each case whether a widow has dealt with the income of her husband's property in such a manner as to make it an accretion to the corpus [p 932, col 2]

[Case-law considered on all points]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 43 of 1913.

The Advocate-General, Messrs. Gopala Desikan and A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, T. R. Krishnaswami Iyer, A. V. Viswanatha Sastri and C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondents.

This appeal and the memorandum of objections filed by the 2nd respondent coming on for hearing on the 22nd, 23rd and 24th October 1924, and having stood over for consideration till the 17th of November 1924 the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—Sivaji, the last Rajah of Tanjore, died in 1855. After his death the East India Company took possession not only of the Raj of Tanjore and the private properties of the late Raja, but also certain pagodas and devasthanams which had been in his possession and management up to the date of his death. It was held by the Privy Council that the East India Company's usurpation of this property amounted to an act of State of which the ordinary Civil Courts could not take cognizance. Subsequently the senior Rani Kamakshi Bai Saheba petitioned Government for a restoration of the estate and also of the devasthanams. The estate was restored by proceedings of the Madras Government, dated 21st August 1862, which we have dealt with in another place. The order restoring the devasthanams was dated the 19th March 1863.

In her memorial, dated the 24th December 1862, Kamakshi Bai Saheba prayed that the pagodas and charitable institutions which had been founded from time to time by members of her family might be made over to her as the head of the family for the time being. She mentioned in her memorial that Mr. Phillips, the Commissioner of Tanjore, had in 1858 recommended the Government to make over these endowments to Sakharam Saheb, husband of the Princess, and that the Government refused to accept that recommendation. The Government Agent, in forwarding Kamakshi Bai's memorial, recommended her prayer to be granted on the ground that it was highly desirable that all connection with these religious institutions on the part of Government should cease. The Governor in Council concurred with the Agent's recommendation and ordered the pagodas to be made over to the Rani. In doing so, the Government did not indicate the course of succession to be followed in the management of these endowments after Kamakshi Bai's death. Accordingly she managed the institution till 1892, when she died.

Upon her death Government again took possession of the devasthanams and put them under the management of the Temple Committee of Tanjore. The next senior Rani Umamba Bai brought a suit (O. S. No. 3 of 1894) for the recovery of these devasthanams and their endowments, basing her title on the fact that she was the senior Rani and head of the family. She impleaded the Secretary of State for India, the members of the Tanjore and Kombakonam Devasthanam Committees and the other Ranis as defendants in her suit. In a careful judgment, in which he set out the history of these institutions. Mr. Venkoba-chariar, then Subordinate Judge of Tanjore came to the conclusion that the Government had no right to resume, or in any way interfere with, the management of the temples after granting them in favour of Kamakshi Bai, that they devolved as impartible property and that by the State grant restoring them Kamakshi Bai acquired heritable interest in the properties. He decreed the suit in plaintiff's favour. There was an appeal to the High Court, which was heard by Shephard and Davies, JJ. Those learned Judges dismissed the appeal holding that the estate taken by the senior Rani was in the nature of self-acquired property in her hands in the sense that her rights were derivative from Government and had no relation to inheritance on the death of the Rajah. They inferred from the fact that the plaintiff was chosen as the person to whom the trust should be made over in her capacity of widow of the late Rajah, that the intention of the Government was to grant her a widow's estate, that is, to put her in the position which she would have enjoyed had there been no confiscation on the death of her husband the Rajah.

After the death of Umamba Bai the devasthanam estate was managed by each of the widows who in turn became senior widow until the last widow Jijamba Bai died in 1912. Disputes then arose between the children of the Rajah's sword wives, who are known as Mangala Vilas people, and the sons of the adopted son, who are defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The former brought O. S. No. 43 of 1913 in which they claimed the right to be declared entitled to the possession and management of the devasthanams and their endowments and also to share in the immoveable and moveable properties purchased by the widows of the late Rajah which became accumulations and accretions to the private estate of the Rajah to which they claimed to succeed either as his heirs or as heirs to the widows who acquired these properties as stridhanam.

The learned Subordinate Judge, in disposing of these and other properties of the Rajah, held that the acquisitions of the various Ranis having been purchased in their own names, became their separate estates; and as regards the devasthanam properties, he held that the Government grant was to Kamakshi Bai by name as a single individual or sole trustee and that the endowments were, therefore, not capable of being made the subject of partition, but would pass to the head of the family for the time being, that individual at the time of suit being the 1st defendant, and he accordingly dismissed the suit.

In appeal, Mr. Alladi Krishnaswami Ayyar argued that the trusteeships of the devasthanams should follow the same line of inheritance as the private estate of the Rajah and that the Mangala Vilas people having been held entitled to share in the private estate, should also be given a share in the management of the temples, the Government having by their grant destroyed the incident of impartibility which once attached to the estate. In support of his arguments he relied on Raja Venkata Rao v. Court of Wards (1), Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (2) the principles upon which this case was decided having been approved by the Privy Council in Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (3) on Sethuramaswamy Iyer v. Meruswami Iyer (4) from which there was an appeal to the Privy Council in Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (5) which reversed the decision of this Court, on Meenakshi Achi v. Somasundaram Pillai (6) and Tkandararoaya Pillai v. Shunmugam Pillai (7).

For the respondent our attention was called to the fact that in the written statement of the 3rd defendant, who was one of the Mangala Vilas people, it was asserted that these properties were impartible and should descend to the senior member of the senior line according to the custom obtaining in the family of the late Rajah. In the Saptur case Ramasami Kamaya Naik v. Sundaralingasami Kamaya Naik (8) it was made clear that the son of a legally married wife is a preferable heir to impartible property over the son of a sword wife or concubine. The decisions in Trimbak v. Lakshman (9) where it was observed that religious offices were naturally indivisible, and in Sri Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Sri Gopal Lalji Maharaj (10) where it was observed that if there are no emoluments attached to an office of trustee, there was no reason to partition the property amongst junior members, were also cited. Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (2) where Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., observed that the usage and custom in respect of religious trusteeships which were hereditary in a family, was generally that the office could be divided by getting the duties discharged in rotation by each member of the family and that the exceptions to that rule would only be a few cases in which the hereditary office may be descendible only to a single heir, was a case of family partition among Chetties of Sivaganga. It was not alleged in that case that there had been any trace of impartibility existing in the family prior to partition. In appeal in Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (3) the Judicial Committee confirmed the decree of this High Court which provided for each member of the family taking one turn of management in succession, the grounds of their Lordship's decision being that there was an unbroken usage evidencing a family arrangement in this particular family and that that arrangement should hold good until altered by the Court or superseded by a new scheme. In Meenakshi Achi v. Somasundaram Pillai (6) the Chief Justice and Seshagiri Ayyar, J., observed that the course of decisions in this Presidency, which had the approval of the Judicial Committee, was opposed to the proposition that the office of a trustee in a public institution was indivisible and regulated by the same rules as the succession to impartible estates. The suit related to certain kattalais attached to a temple in the Tanjore District, and the learned Judges held that a claim by the seniormost male member to manage alone among the heirs should be proved as a special custom. From the history of the case it appears that these kattalais were managed for some years by the Board of Revenue and that they restored the management and the enjoyment of the lands to two members of the family representing the senior and the junior branches. In such a case, the usage of the institution was obviously opposed to the principle of management by a sole trustee. In Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 439, it is stated that the devolution of the trust upon the death or default of each trustee depends upon the terms upon which it was created, or the usage of each particular institution where no express trust deed exists.

In 1863, when Government restored the management of these temples to Kamakshi Bai, it was thought that it was the universal custom of the country that the eldest male heir of a deceased trustee should succeed as trustee to the person from whom he inherited: see Purappavanalingam Chetti v. Nullasivan Chetti (11). And in the Sivaganga case Muttu Vaduganadha Tevar v. Dora Singha Tevar (12) the Privy Council recognized the principle that in re-granting an impartible zemindari and issuing a sanad, the Government could retain the quality of impartibility in respect of any of the property thereby restored. From the history of these institutions described in Mr. Venkoba-chariar's judgment in O. S. No. 3 of 1894,

Ex. A-197, it appears that the Rajah of Tanjore founded several religious institutions and acquired lands and gave them as endowments to temples, that the pagodas were managed by Serfoji as hereditary trustee and that on his death his son Sivaji succeeded to all the rights and privileges of his father including the management of the pagodas. I am of opinion, therefore, that the founders of these institutions intended that their successors who occupied the Raj should continue to have the sole management of the temples and pagodas and the endowments attached to them. It follows, therefore, that to divide these properties among the many claimants to the estate of the late Sivaji would be a policy inconsistent with the intentions of the founder of the institution when he endowed the temples with lands. I am further of opinion that when Government restored these properties to Kamakshi Bai as "head of the family for the time being," they indicated their intention that they should continue to be managed by a sole trustee. If it were necessary for the 1st defendant to prove that sole trusteeship is an incident of this hereditary trust, I should be prepared to find it proved.

In this view, the Subordinate Judge was right in recognizing the 1st defendant as being the lawful trustee who should manage these properties for his lifetime in his capacity of head of the family, and I consider that the appeal should be dismissed so far as these properties are concerned.

Next as regards the purchases of immoveable and moveable properties made by the widows out of their savings, and as regards their jewels, it must be remembered that the Ranis were only receiving a small income from the Mokhasa estate and pensions of Rs. 800 a month sanctioned by Government, and that from 1867 till the date of suit a Receiver was in charge of the estate. Thus the present is not an instance of a widow in possession of her husband's estate making acquisitions out of income, in which case the Privy Council declared in Nabakishore Mandal v. Upendrakishore Mandal (13) that the acquisitions would become accretions to the husband's estate unless it were shown that she dealt with it in such a manner that it would remain her own [vide also Bhagbutti Devi v. Bholanath Thakoor (14).]

Whether the after-purchases form accretions to the corpus of a deceased husband's estate or stridhanam of the widow depends upon her intention, which has to be gathered in every case from her manner of dealing with the property [vide Isri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (15)] where the authorities are reviewed, and later cases in Akkanna v. Venkayya (16) and Subramanian Chetti v. Arunachelam Chetti (17) and Sheolochun Singh v. Sahib Singh (18).

In every case it is a question of fact whether a widow has dealt with the income of her husband's property in such a manner as to make it an accretion to the corpus [vide Rajah of Ramnad v. Sundara Pandiyasami Tevar (19)]

As for presumptions, when it is shown that the corpus of the estate has been all along in the possession of a Receiver or of the Court of Wards as was the case in Saodamini Dasi v. Administrator-General of Bengal (20) and in Zemindar of Bhadrachalam and Palavantha v. Venkatadri Appa Rao (21) and here, there is no room for presuming that the widow intended to make the investments of the funds received by her part of her husband's estate, when she did not get her husband's estate into her possession.

As for item No. 3 in Sch. D-1 which is an acquisition of Anusamba Bai Saheba who died in 1895, she wrote a letter A-186 to the Collector announcing her intention to create a trust in favour of the adopted son's son and received a reply A-187 acknowledging her letter.

As regards jewels of Jijamba Bai, it is stated in the written statements of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 that they were purchased out of the savings from her own income, and there being no evidence contra, the Subordinate Judge was right in treating them as her absolute property.

Lastly, assuming that these properties were the self-acquisitions of the widows, the appellants claim to be sapindas and to have a right to succeed to the stridhanam of widows who were married in an approved form, on the ground that it goes on their deaths without issue to the heirs of their husband.

In Subramania Iyer v. Rathnavelu Chetty (22) it was held by a Full Bench that the illegitimate son of a sudra ranked as a sapinda of his putative father, and that the latter was entitled to succeed to his property if he died without issue.

But the Full Bench recognized the fact that an illegitimate son had never been regarded by any of the Courts in India as an heir to his putative father's collateral relations, and that the authorities against such a proposition were very strong (see page 72)*. I am not satisfied that there are sufficient grounds to re-consider that statement of the law as it now stands. The reason for giving an illegitimate son a half share of what a legitimate son of a sudra gets is morally justifiable on the ground that he has a legal right to be maintained by his putative father, but there is no legal obligation to maintain illegitimate children of collaterals.

The result is that the appeal of the Mangala Vilas parties in this suit is dismissed.

The costs of appellants and respondents Nos. 1 and 2, so far as the appeal relates to the devasthanam estate, will be payable out of the income of the devasthanam estate, as it was necessary to have the question of devolution of the trust finally settled, but the appeal, so far as accretions and accumulations are concerned is dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

The memorandum of objections is also dismissed with costs of respondent No. 1.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—This appeal relates to the devasthanam known as the Fort or Palace devasthanam and the endowments founded by the Rajahs of Tanjore and to the share of the plaintiffs in the immoveable properties described in the plaint which were purchased and enjoyed by the widows of Sivaji Maharaja who was the last Rajah of Tanjore. also made to the jewels and moveables left by the Ranis.

The plaintiffs and the 3rd and 4th defendants represent the illegitimate branch and the 1st and 2nd defendants are the grandsons of the late Sivaji Maharaja, the last ruler of Tanjore, being the sons of Serfoji who was adopted by Kamakshi Bai Saheba. The other defendants are alienees from one or other of the Ranis.

The plaintiffs sued for the trusteeship and possession of the devasthanam properties and for the recovery of possession of the stridhanam properties left by the widows on the ground that they and the 3rd and 4th defendants are the sons of the sword wives of the late Rajah and for a declaration that the 1st and 2nd defendants have no rights as the adoption of their father is invalid, that the alienations by the widows in favour of the other defendants are invalid beyond the lifetime of the widows and that the plaintiffs as heirs are entitled to succeed. The contesting defendants denied that the plaintiffs and the 3rd and 4th defendants have any right as the sons of sword wives to the devasthanam and other properties and stated that the alienations by the widows could not be questioned or set aside by the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. As regards the devasthanam properties he held that the grant by the Government was to a single individual or sole trustee and there can be no claim for participation. It would, therefore, pass to the head of the family for the time being and that the 1st defendant as the senior representative was entitled to be the sole trustee. As regards the other properties he held that the properties claimed were the stridhanam properties of the Ranis and not accretions to the Raj and that the plaintiffs and the 3rd and 4th defendants were not the heirs to the stridhanam properties. He dismissed the plaintiffs' suit and hence the appeal.

The 2nd defendant filed a memorandum of objections against that portion of the decree which declared that the 1st defendant was entitled to be the sole trustee. His case is that he is entitled along with the 1st defendant to be the trustee of the devasthanam properties.

We have held in the appeals which relate to the private properties of Sivaji Maharaja that the plaintiffs and the 3rd and 4th defendants formed the illegitimate branch, that the Tanjore Rajahs were Sudras by caste and that the illegitimate sons and their branch of the family who are known as the Mangala Vilas branch were only entitled to the shares which the illegitimate sons of a sudra would take in their father's properties. We also held that the adoption of the father of the 1st and 2nd defendants was valid and that the 1st and 2nd defendants as the adopted sons of the late Rajah were entitled to inherit his properties and we ordered a partition of the private properties between the legitimate and the illegitimate branches. In disposing of this appeal it is clear that the claim of the plaintiffs in the plaint must be viewed from the standpoint of the above findings, and they can only get such rights as the law confers on the illegitimate sons of a sudra.

The questions which arise for determination in this appeal are—

(1) Whether under the terms of the grant by the Government the trusteeship of the devasthanam properties vests in all the heirs of Sivaji Maharaja, the last Ruler of Tanjore, like ordinary partible property and has to be managed by turns by each of such branches or whether it vests in the senior male member of the eldest branch of the family for the time being;

(2) whether the properties acquired by the widows of the late Sivaji Maharaja were accretions to the estate and consequently divisible between such persons as would be entitled to a partition of the estate or whether they were the stridhanam properties of the widows who made the acquisitions and are descendible to the stridhana heirs; and

(3) if the properties are stridhanam properties, whether the plaintiffs and the 3rd and 4th defendants would be entitled to a share.

As regards the trusteeship of the devasthanam and other trust properties, I am of opinion that the Subordinate Judge is right. The devasthanam and other endowments were taken charge of by the Government along with the Raj and the private estate of the last Rajah on his death. We have, in our judgment, in the appeals from the main case traced the course of events from the confiscation of the Raj to the death of his last Rani. Kamakshi Bai Saheba, the senior widow and Rani, got possession of the private properties of the Rajah under the terms of the grant (Ex. A-46), dated the 21st August 1862. She petitioned the Government for the restoration to her of the devasthanam and other trust properties, and the Government by their order, dated the 19th of March 1863, put her in possession of such properties. From 1863 to 1892 Kamakshi Bai Saheba was managing the properties as the sole trustee, and although a Receiver was appointed in 1865 in the litigation between Kamakshi Bai Saheba and her co-widows, the Receiver did not take possession of the devasthanam properties and Kamakshi Bai Saheba was managing them as the sole trustee. On the death of Kamakshi Bai Saheba the Government took possession of the trust properties and Umamba Bai Saheba who was then the senior Rani filed Original Suit No. 3 of 1894 against the Secretary of State and the members of the devasthanam Committees of Tanjore and Kumbakonam and the other surviving Ranis for a declaration of her right to succeed to the office and for possession of the properties. The Subordinate Judge in an exhaustive judgment decreed in favour of the plaintiff and the judgment had been filed as Ex. A-197 in the suit. He held that on a construction of the Government grant of 1863 the restoration of the management of the pagoda to Kamakshi Bai Saheba carried with it heritable right and that the right was transmissible to her heirs, the Government having no right to resume or interfere with the management of the temple after the death of Kamakshi Bai Saheba. He was also of opinion that succession to the management should be traced in the same way as succession to the impartible Raj; that on the death of Kamakshi Bai Saheba the right did not vest jointly in the surviving widows and that the plaintiff as the senior widow was entitled to succeed. Against this judgment there was an appeal filed to the High Court which is reported as Kaliana Sundaram Ayyar v. Umamba Bai Saheba (23). The decision of the Subordinate Judge was confirmed and it was held by Shephard and Davies, JJ., that the estate taken by Kamakshi Bai Saheba under the grant was in the nature of self-acquired property in the Rani's hands in the sense that her rights were derived from Government and had no relation back to inheritance on the death of the Rajah and that as she asked that the management should be put in her hands in the capacity as the head of the family for the time being, the inference was that the intention was to grant a widow's estate, that is, to put Kamakshi Bai Saheba in the position which she would have enjoyed had there been no confiscation on the death of her husband the Rajah. This decision does not, however, conclude the question as to whether on the death of the last of the Ranis the trusteeship and management was to be in the senior member of the family or whether it was to be treated as a right which should be enjoyed by all the members who were to divide the private properties of the Rajah. So far as the terms of the grant go, the Government order putting Kamakshi Bai Saheba in management of the devasthanam properties differs in several respects from the grant of 1862 and the order of the 19th of March 1863 simply says that it is desirable that the connection of Government with the pagodas should cease and they will accordingly be made over to Her Highness Kamakshi Bai Saheba.

In dealing with the question of management of the trust property, I think the first question to be considered is the usage as regards the management prior to the death of Sivaji Maharaja, the last Ruler of Tanjore. There can be little doubt, and it is not seriously contended before us by the appellants, that this temple and the charities which were founded by the successive Rajahs of Tanjore were in the possession and management of the Rajah for the time being and that till the death of Sivaji the office was always held by a single individual. When the Raj was seized by the Government as an act of State, the pagodas and the devasthanam were also taken possession of and managed by the Government; but they were not desirous of taking upon themselves the responsibility of managing the temple and the devasthanam properties. The Government at one time wanted that the devasthanams should be made over to Sakharam Saheb, the son-in-law of Sivaji Maharaja, as sole trustee. Sakharam Saheb had married the elder daughter of the late Maharaja and on her death he married the younger daughter. As, however, there were disputes between Sakharam Saheb on the one side and Kamakshi Bai Saheba on the other, this proposal was not given effect to. In 1860 there was an idea of transferring the management to Avu Bai Saheba, the late Rajah's mother but she was not willing to assume management. After Kamakshi Bai Saheba got possession of the private properties of the Rajah, she claimed the restoration of the devasthanams and the endowments on the ground that they were vested in her husband and that she was the then head of the family. Her request was supported by the Government Agent and the outcome of it was the order of 1863 transferring the management to her. From 1863 till her death in 1892 she was the sole trustee and it was till then nobody's contention that the office of trustee could partake of the nature of private property and that each of the surviving Ranis was to have the management by turns and although the Receiver took possession of all the private properties, the trust properties were left in the possession and management of Kamakshi Bai Saheba. On her death the next senior Rani was, as the result of the suit which I have already referred to, put in possession and management and on the death of each senior Rani the junior succeeded. I am unable to find anything either in the Government order or in the surrounding circumstances which changed the usage prevailing as regards these institutions, namely, the management by a single individual who was the head of the family for the time being and which rendered it subject to all the incidents of partible property.

In cases of religious institutions the main question to be considered is what was the usage of the institutions; and where from the date of the foundation of these charities up to the date of the present suit the trust was managed by a single individual who was the head of the family not in possession of any partible property, I think it would require very strong evidence to show that there is anything in the grant by the Government of 1862 which introduced a new course of devolution and would make it subject to all the incidents of a trusteeship held by a member of a joint and undivided family. As I said before, there is nothing in the grant of 1862 which either expressly or by implication changed the usage of these institutions. They formed part of the Tanjore Raj and the Rajah for the time being was the trustee. As regards the private properties which were restored by the order of 1863 there are express words which make the grant subject to the ordinary Hindu Law applicable to partible properties and the properties were to descend according to Hindu Law. There are no such words in the grant of the devasthanam properties to Kamakshi Bai Saheba. The devasthanams having been part of the Tanjore Raj and the trusteeship having devolved on the Rajah for the time being, the right of management till the confiscation by the East India Company must be treated as impartible property and the office as one which was held only by a single individual.

It was of course open to the Government to destroy that character and to grant the office on such terms as to succession as it thought fit. The confiscation having destroyed all antecedent rights there can be no question of any vested rights as to succession to the office. I am unable to infer from the mere fact that Kamakshi Bai Saheba applied for possession of the devasthanam properties as senior widow and was put in possession, the course of succession to the office changed. Even if there was no confiscation, the office vested in the senior member of the Rajah's family. In cases of confiscation and re-grant of property which is impartible, the law is that in the absence of anything in the re-grant, the property which is re-granted is subject to the old incident of impartibility. In Baboo Beer Pertab Sahee v. Maharajah Rajender Pertab Sahee (24) the zemindari of Hunsapore which was an impartible Raj and which descended to the eldest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture was confiscated by the East India Company and was in the possession of the Government for some years. It was then granted to the younger member of the family of the deposed Rajah. It was held that although the zemindari was to be treated as the self-acquired property of the grantee, the grant being from the Ruling Power, in the absence of evidence of the intention of the grantors to the contrary, carried the incidents of the family tenure as a Raj. In Muttu Vaduganadha Tevar v. Dora Singha Tevar (12) the Sivaganga zemindari which was originally impartible was confiscated by the Government and re-granted and it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the re-grant did not make the estate partible. A similar view was also taken by their Lordships in Ram Nundun Singh v. Jankei Koer (25) where it was held that the confiscation and re-grant of an impartible

Raj to the various members of the family did not make the property re-granted partible. The mere fact that there was a re-grant would not, in my opinion, destroy the course of devolution followed till that date.

Great reliance was placed by Mr. Krishna-swami Ayyar for the appellants on the decision reported as Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty, (2) which was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (3). In that case the question was as to the validity of an arrangement come to by the members of an undivided family regarding the management by turns of a devasthanam which was hereditary in the family. The question turned upon the usage as regards the management, and Benson and Bhashyam Ayyangar, JJ., in the course of their judgment, observe: "Except in the few cases in which the hereditary office may be descendible only to a single heir, the usage and custom generally is that along with other properties the office also is divided in the sense that the office is agreed to be held and the duties thereof discharged in rotation by each member or branch of the family, the duration of their turns being in proportion to their shares in the family property." Their Lordships of the Privy Council rest their decision on the usage as regards the trusteeship. Lord Macnaghten in delivering judgment of their Lordships observes as follows:—"In their Lordships' opinion the case is a very simple one. They think the unbroken usage for a period of nineteen years is as against the appellant conclusive evidence of a family arrangement to which the Court is bound to give effect." It is on this sole ground that they held that there was nothing improper in the arrangement.

There can be little doubt that the Hindu text-writers treated a trusteeship or a right to the management of religious or charitable endowments as impartible property. In Mancharam v. Pranshankar (26) it was pointed out that the management of religious endowments is indivisible though modern custom has sanctioned a departure by allowing the parties entitled to officiate by turns. This decision was followed in Trimbak v. Lakshman (9). The inconvenience of such a custom was also pointed out. Candy and Ranade, JJ., observed: "It is clear that if the present claim of the appellant were recognized, each of the sons of the parties—and they have many—might claim a share, not only in the family share, but in the devasthan share and office also, and this process might go on with each generation, frittering away the income, and making the service wholly ineffective. The lower Court appears to have assumed, without any such evidence as is suggested in Mohunt Rumun Dass v. Mohunt Ashbul Dass (27) that the office is partible with the income. The practice of many generations of the parties must be considered in settling the questions of impartibility, and that practice is in this case against partition with the one single exception of what took place in 1838." This case was cited with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (5).

Where impartibility and management by a single individual who was the eldest member of the eldest branch of the family has been the rule from the foundation of the trust till the date of the present suit, I find nothing either in Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (2) or Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (3) which compels us to hold that the office should be treated as partible property and that on partition of the other properties of the family, this office should be held by turns. I may also point out that, having regard to the numerous descendants of the late Rajah who would, if the office is held to be partible, be entitled to turns of management and having regard also to the future growth of the family, it would be against the interests of the trust to give the numerous parties turns of management and I am not prepared to do so unless compelled either by the established usage of the institution or the terms of the re-grant by the Government. I think the proper rule in such cases is to see whether there is any deed constituting the trust and regulating the course of devolution of the trust. If there is such a document, then the devolution will, of course, be regulated by the terms of the document constituting the trust. If there is no such document, the Court has to see what was the usage of the institution and to give effect to such usage. Where there is no uniform course of conduct, the interests of the institution should be the first consideration. If the management can, without detriment to the trust, be held by turns, it is open to the Court to decree management by turns. I have not been referred to any texts which state that the office of dharmakartha or trustee of a religious or charitable endowment is to be treated as joint property on partition and that turns have to be given to each member of the undivided family who gets a share in the partition irrespective of the interests of the charities. I do not find anything in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (3) to warrant the rule that even in the case of public charities and trusts the claims of the dividing co-parceners should override the interests of the institution and the observation of their Lordships in Sathuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (5) rather suggests that the rule laid down as to turns of management on partition applies only to private charities.

I find it difficult to accept the argument of Mr. Venkatachariar for the 2nd defendant that the management should be confined to the 1st and 2nd defendants by turns to the exclusion of the illegitimate sons. Either the office is impartible and descends on the eldest member of the senior line or it should be treated as partible and turns given to all those who are entitled to share in the family properties. There is no principle on which the office can be confined to the 1st and 2nd defendants to the exclusion of the Mangala Vilas branch.

As regards the properties left by the last Rani in respect of which partition is claimed, I do not think the plaintiffs are entitled to any share. I do not think that the properties acquired by the Ranis can be said to be accretions to their husbands' estate and to devolve upon the persons who would be entitled as reversioners to their property. From the year 1866 up till the date of this suit there was a Receiver in charge of the estate and none of the widows were in possession or management. I have, in my judgment, in the suit relating to the private properties of the late Rajah given my reasons for holding that the estate was not strictly a Hindu widow's estate but that the grant by the Government was on terms which were analogous to it. It was held in Jijoyiamba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Bayi Saiba (28) that whatever right the widows would have enjoyed had they succeeded to the estate of the late of Rajah under Hindu Law were destroyed by the grant of 1862 which was to be regarded as the root of title. Each Rani got about Rs. 9,600 a year as pension from the Government. The widows had their own properties and had also jewels and there is nothing to show that the properties now claimed were acquired with the income of the estate left by their husbands and not with the savings from their pensions or dealings with their own stridhanam properties. Before the plaintiffs can claim the properties as accretions to the husbands' estate, they must show that the properties were purchased out of the income of the estate or out of the savings therefrom. There is no evidence that the acquisitions by the Ranis were treated as part of their husbands' estate or mixed up with it, but on the contrary we find that the Ranis were anxious to dispose of the properties which they had acquired. It is difficult to see how there can be said to be any accretions to the estate left by their husbands.

So far as this Presidency is concerned, the authorities are to the effect that there is no presumption that property acquired by a Hindu widow out of funds which were at her absolute disposal would form part of her husband's estate. I have dealt with this question in Zamindar of Bhadrachalam & Palavencha v. Venkatadri Appa Rao (21). In Rajah of Ramnad v. Sundara Pandiyasami Tevar (19) their Lordships of the Privy Council observe: "Their Lordships think the answer to this is that a widow may so deal with the income of her husband's estate as to make it an accretion to the corpus. It may be that the presumption is the other way. A case has been cited to their Lordships which seems so to say. But at the outside it is a presumption and it is a question of fact to be determined, if there is any dispute, whether a widow has or has not so dealt with her property." The case referred to seems to be Akkanna v. Venkayya (16) which was referred to in the course of the argument by Mr. De Gruyther.

It is argued by Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar that the decision of the Privy Council in Nobakishore Mandal v. Upendrakishore Mandal (13) has settled the question which was left in doubt in Rajah of Ramnad v. Sundara Pandiyasami Tevar (19). There is an observation of their Lordships at page 256 to the following effect: "Now there can, their Lordships think, be no doubt that whatever stridhan she possessed was due to the accumulated savings from the income of the property which she received from her husband's estate, and though it is true that when that property had been received it would be possible for her so to deal with it that it would remain her own, yet it must be traced and shown to have been so dealt with, and in this case there is no sufficient evidence of this having been done." It is argued that the effect of this observation is that the onus is on the other side to show that she did something which would indicate an intention of treating the accretions as her own and not as part of her husband's estate. The previous decisions of the Privy Council are not referred to by their Lordships and I do not think this case can be said to overrule all the previous decisions of their Lordships on the subject.

I am of opinion that the decision in Saodamini Dasi v. Administrator-General of Bengal (20) is clear authority for the view that where a widow is not in possession of her husband's estate there can be no question of any purchase made by her being an accretion to her husband's estate. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observe: "The appellant's Counsel contended that the savings of a Hindu widow must be presumed to have been made for the benefit of her husband's estate. Without examining the precise result of the decisions, it is sufficient to say that in this case there is no room for any such presumption, for the corpus of the estate never came to the widow, but was taken by Shamcharan Mullick under the Will, and the income to which the widow succeeded was separated from it, and became and was dealt with as an entirely separate fund."

I think the result of the authorities may be summed up as follows:—A Hindu widow has an absolute right of disposal over the income of the property which she inherits from her husband. She can either spend the same or accumulate it for her own benefit. In cases where she purchases properties or invests her savings and indicates by her conduct an intention that the properties purchased out of her savings should form part of her husband's estate, such savings should follow the same rules as regards devolution to her husband's estate and should be treated as accretions to the estate. Where she does not do so, she has absolute powers of disposal over such property and can sell or give the same to anybody she pleases without any right of the reversioners to question her alienations. Where the question is one of intention to be deduced or inferred from her conduct, the presumption is that she intends to keep the property for her own absolute benefit and to have absolute powers of disposal over it. Where, however, a widow is not in possession of her husband's estate, there is no presumption that any of the properties which she gets are to be treated as accretions to her husband's estate nor can an intention be inferred that she wants to treat them as part of her husband's estate. On her death such properties would follow the same course of succession as her stridhanam properties.

The claim in this appeal relates to the properties left by (1) Umamba Bai Saheba who died on the 4th of July 1900 possessed of items Nos. 1 and 2 in Sch. D-1 to the plaint, (2) Anusamba Bai Saheba, who died on the 30th September 1895 having item No. 3 in Sch. D-1 and (3) Jijamba Bai Saheba the last surviving widow. It is alleged that the properties in Sch. E to the plaint were left by Jijamba Bai Saheba.

As regards item No. 3 in Sch. D-1 which is the acquisition of Anusamba Bai Saheba, the evidence is that on her death Serfoji got possession of the property and after him his son, the 1st defendant, got possession. She also wrote to the Government Agent that she wanted to give the property to the adopted son and she made a settlement. The evidence, oral and documentary, shows that on her death in 1895 Serfoji got into possession in accordance with the settlement made by Anusamba Bai Saheba. The claim to item No. 3 by the present plaintiffs is, therefore, clearly barred by limitation, even assuming that the plaintiffs are her heirs.

As regards the properties of Jijamba Bai Saheba, the last Rani, she has left a Will disposing of her properties and it follows that the plaintiffs can have no claim, she, in my opinion, having had full disposing power over the savings from her husband's estate, her pension, and her own stridhanam jewels.

As regards properties left by Umamba Bai Saheba, she died in 1900 and Jijamba Bai Saheba took possession of her properties. She claimed to be the heir of Umamba Bai Saheba and it does not appear that she claimed anything more than a co-widow's right to succeed. It is now settled law that there is no distinction as to the nature of the estate taken between property inherited by a woman from a male and property inherited from a female. In both the cases she takes not an absolute estate but only a qualified one. I need only refer to Venkataramakrishna Rau v. Bhujanga Rau (29), Virasangappa Shetti v. Rudrappa Shetti (30), and to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sheo Shankar Lal v. Debi Sahar (31) and Sheo Partab Bahadur Singh v. Allahabad Bank (32). This being so, it follows from the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Lajwanti v. Safe Chand (33) that a suit which is filed within twelve years of Jijamba Bai Saheba's death would not be barred. As Umamba Bai Saheba did not make any disposition of the properties, the question is who are the heirs to the properties left by her at the time of her death which were in the possession of her co-widow Jijamba Bai Saheba. The plaintiffs belonging to the illegitimate branch and being the descendants of the last Rajah in existence, the question is whether under Hindu Law they can succeed to the estate of the Ranis, and this turns on the question whether in the case of sudras the illegitimate sons have got any right to collateral succession.

It is argued by Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar that in the absence of son, daughter and daughter's son the stridhanam property goes to the husband and his heirs, and that if you come to the point where there are no such heirs as above-named, you have to make no difference between the husband's property and the stridhanam property of the wife and all her husband's heirs will be entitled to succeed. He, therefore, argues that even if the property left by Umamba Bai Saheba who died issueless was her stridhanam property, succession must be traced as if it was the property of her husband and as the illegitimate sons would succeed along with the legitimate sons to the properties of their father, they would also succeed to the stridhanam properties in the same proportion. Reference has been made to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bai Kesserbai v. Hunsraj Mirarji (34), where their Lordships refer to Mitakshara, Mayukha and the texts of Brihaspathi as regards succession to stridhanam properties and hold that in the case of approved forms of marriage the heirs enumerated by Brihaspathi who are blood relations of the husband would succeed to the woman's property. Reference is also made to Marya Pillai v. Sivabagya-thachi (35), where it was held that the stridhanam property of a woman married according to the approved form who has left no issue will devolve on her husband and on failure of the husband the property will go to his sapindas in the order laid down in Mitakshara with reference to the succession to the property of a male and to Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi Ammal (36), where a similar rule has been laid down. Were the matter res integra, I am disposed to hold that in the case of sudras an illegitimate son is in the same position as a legitimate son except that he gets a lesser share. The fact that an illegitimate son gets a lesser share would not by itself create a bar to collateral succession any more than the fact that an adopted son who exists along with a natural son born subsequently and who gets a lesser share would be barred. But there is a long catena of cases beginning with Nissar Murtojah v. Kowar Dhunwunt Roy (37) which decide that an illegitimate son has no right to collateral succession. I have in Subramania Iyer v. Rathnavelu Chetty (22) referred to all the authorities and dealt fully with the illegitimate son's rights and as regards the position of an illegitimate son to collateral succession. The right was negated in Krishnayyan v. Muttusami (38), Ranoji v.

The words 'any person' in O. XL, r. 1 (b), C. P. C., refer to persons interested in the property and in possession or custody of it prior to the passing of an order appointing a Receiver [p. 911, col. 2].

The selection and appointment of a particular person as a Receiver is a matter of judicial discretion to be determined by the Court according to the circumstances of the case [p. 912, col. 2].

It is a settled rule that one of the parties to a cause should not be appointed Receiver without the consent of the other parties unless a very special case is made out [p. 943, col. 1].

On an application for the removal of a Receiver, the Court should properly consider his past relations to the parties as well as his present sympathies. If by reason of interest shown by the Receiver as an officer of the Court his efficiency is impaired the Court will be justified in removing him [p. 943, col. 2].

JUDGMENT.

Graham, J.—This appeal is directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan removing a Receiver, who had been appointed in a suit (No. 142 of 1923) for declaration of title and partition of certain moveable and immoveable properties.

A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondents that no appeal lies, and it becomes necessary to deal with this first. So far as this Court is concerned the question appears to be one of first impression. At all events no case has been brought to our notice in which this particular point has been decided. It is contended that r. 1 (s) of O. XLIII of the C. P. C., under which alone an appeal can lie, has no application, inasmuch as r. 1 (1) (a) of O. XL refers only to appointment of a Receiver, and is silent as to his removal. It is argued that, as the C. P. C. nowhere expressly provides a right of appeal against an order removing or dismissing a Receiver, an intention to provide for such appeal ought not to be read into the Act.

Now O. XLIII, r. 1 (s) gives a right of appeal against an order under r. 1 or 14 of O. XL. The learned Advocate for the appellants in meeting the objection has not relied on r. 4 of that Order, and it is obvious that it has no application in the present case. He has relied, however, on r. 1 (1) (b) of O. XL. This sub-section and the portion which precedes it read as follows.

"When it appears to the Court to be just and convenient, the Court may by order ..

.. remove any person from the possession or custody of the property".

It is argued that the words "any person" include a Receiver and that, that being so, the appeal is competent.

It is, I think, open to doubt whether this sub-section has the wide meaning sought to be attached to it, so as to make it include a Receiver, and it appears to me that it refers to persons interested in the property and in possession or custody of it prior to the passing of an order appointing a Receiver. This view seems also to be supported by sub-s. (c) which follows.

In my opinion, however, an appeal will lie under sub-s. (a) of r. 1 (1) of O. XL. The words used therein are, it is true, "appoint a Receiver of any property," but under s. 16 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) the power to appoint includes the power to remove or dismiss, the power to terminate being a necessary sequence from and adjunct to the power to create, and it may, therefore, be argued that, if a right of appeal is given against appointment, it is given equally against the removal of a Receiver, since appointment includes the right to remove. It is true the Code nowhere makes express provision for an appeal against the removal of a Receiver, as it does in the case of his appointment, but the reason may well be that it was not considered necessary by virtue of the section in the General Clauses Act referred to above. Indeed one of the objects of a General Clauses Act is to avoid superfluity. Moreover, if an appeal lies against the appointment of a Receiver, it would seem to be only logical and consistent that an appeal should equally lie against his removal.

But, it has been urged on behalf of the respondents, even if the appeal is held to be competent, it is premature, inasmuch as no Receiver has yet been appointed by name to supersede the Receiver who has been removed, and that, that being so, it is merely an interlocutory order, and not a final order, and so no appeal will lie. In support of this view reference has been made to the case of Upendra Nath Nag Chowdhury v. Bhupendra Nath Nag Chowdhury (1). In that case the material part of the order appealed against was in these terms: "I think the whole of the property in suit will be better managed and the interest of all the parties will be better served if the property in suit be placed in the hands of a competent Receiver". Subsequently on a date after the appeal to the High Court had been filed one Nakuleswar Bose was appointed as Receiver. It was held on these facts that the order in question was an interlocutory order and not a final order, and that the appeal was, therefore, premature and incompetent. Similarly in the present case no Receiver has yet been appointed by name, the reason apparently being that the order did not contemplate the appointment of the new Receiver until the following month, and in the meanwhile this appeal, involving the sending up of the record to this Court, was filed on the 16th June 1925. It may be argued, therefore, that the order was merely interlocutory, that the appeal was premature, and that the appellants should have waited until the new Receiver was appointed when there could be no possible doubt as to the competency of the appeal.

In reply to this, however, the learned Advocate for the appellants contends that, if an order consists of two parts, half of it being interlocutory, and half final he is entitled to appeal against that portion of it which is final, and he argues that, inasmuch as part of the order directed that the Receiver was to be removed, the Defendant No. 1 was entitled to appeal, and that he was bound to exercise his right, or run the risk of losing it.

There is certainly some force in this contention. The crucial question seems to be whether it was a final order or not. The effect of the order was that the Receiver was declared to be removed, and it seems to me that the mere fact that the appointment of the new Receiver was postponed (presumably as a matter of convenience) to the beginning of the next month cannot in any way affect the position. So far as the Subordinate Judge was concerned it was presumably a final order, which it would not have been open to him to revise. It was something more than a preliminary order, or expression of opinion. This view of the matter finds support in the case of Palaniappa Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (2) decided by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court.

The present case is distinguishable from the case in 13 Calcutta Law Journal [Upendra Nath Nag Chowdhury v. Bhupendra Nath Nag Chowdhury (1)] referred to above, inasmuch as there was in that case no question of removal it being merely a question of appointment, and it was held that the order was interlocutory and not final with the result that the appeal was premature.

In my opinion, therefore, the order must be held to be a final order, and as such, consistently with the view which I have taken as to the interpretation to be put on r. 1 (1) (a) of O. XL, liable to be challenged by way of appeal.

On the merits the substantial contention on behalf of the appellants is that the removal of the Receiver was, having regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case, wholly unjustifiable I was at one stage of the hearing rather inclined to hold that this contention had been substantiated, but upon further reflection I have formed a decided opinion that we should not be justified in the particular circumstances of this case in interfering with the discretion which has been exercised by the Court below. There can be no doubt that an Appellate Court has the power to interfere, and ought to do so in a fit case for such interference, and where it has been shown that there has been arbitrary exercise of the power of removal. At the same time Courts of Appeal have always been reluctant to interfere in a matter which is regarded as one purely within the discretion of the Court concerned. The principles applicable to such cases have been frequently laid down, and it will suffice to refer to one of these cases Kali Kumari v. Bachhan Singh (3) where the subject is dealt with. It was there held that the selection and appointment of a particular person as a Receiver is a matter of judicial discretion to be determined by the Court according to the circumstances of the case, and that the exercise of this, like other matters of judicial discretion, will rarely be interfered with by an appellate tribunal. It was further held that in order to induce the Appellate Court to interfere it is necessary to show some overwhelming objection in point of propriety, or some fatal objection in principle to the person named. It was also pointed out that it is a settled rule that one of the parties to a cause should not be appointed Receiver without the consent of the other party unless a very special case is made out.

That was a case of appointment of a Receiver, but the principles laid down appear to be equally applicable in a case of removal, and the question which then arises is whether in this instance there has been such an arbitrary exercise of discretion by the Court below as would justify our interference. In my opinion no such case has been made out. The main point is that the Receiver has failed to submit any explanation, which can be considered satisfactory, of his omission to show in his accounts the sum of Rs. 4,000 realised by him after his appointment as Receiver from Messrs. N. C. Sarkar & Sons on account of royalties due to the estate. This was a sufficiently serious matter, but the Receiver does not appear to have considered it necessary to go into the witness-box to meet this and other charges which were preferred against him. All that he condescended to do was to submit an explanation through his Pleader, so that in a manner he seems to have allowed the case against him to go by default. On his own showing some portion of this money would go to the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos 6 and 7 according to the determination of their shares in the pending suit, and it was, therefore, incumbent upon him to show the amount, or at all events portion of it in his accounts.

On this ground alone the propriety of the order made in the Court below cannot, I think, be challenged with success. But there is another aspect of the matter. It is clear from the learned Subordinate Judge's order that owing to the embittered relations between the parties a great deal of the Court's time had been unnecessarily wasted in hearing all sorts of objections and petitions (there is ample evidence of this on the record), and there seemed every probability that the management of the estate might be seriously hampered. The Subordinate Judge considered that such an undesirable state of affairs should be put an end to, and with that opinion it is not possible to find fault. Indeed matters might almost have reached an impasse. Again, apart from the item of Rs. 4,000, there appears to be some justification for the contention that the Receiver has betrayed bias in his management. Absolute impartiality as between the parties to the litigation is, however, an indispensable qualification of a Receiver, and upon an application for his removal, the Court may properly consider his past relations to the parties as well as his present sympathies. If by reason of interest shown by him the efficiency of the Receiver as an officer of the Court is impaired, the Court will be justified in removing him.

Finally it is to be observed that in cases where one of the parties to the litigation is appointed as Receiver the order is usually based on consent of the parties, though there may be exceptional cases where this is not so. In the present instance the appointment was at first made with the consent of the parties. That consent has now been withdrawn, the allegation being that the other parties have lost their faith in the Receiver as a result of his misconduct. In these circumstances the foundation upon which the appointment rested no longer exists, and with the withdrawal of the consent it may be argued that the justification for retaining him as Receiver disappears.

For these reasons stated while I am of opinion that the appeal is competent, I hold that no case has been made out on the merits which would justify us in interfering. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs. The hearing-fee is assessed at five gold mohurs to the plaintiffs, three gold mohurs to the defendant No. 6 and two gold mohurs to the defendant No. 7.

Case stated, under s. 66 (2) of the Indian Income Tax Act XI of 1922, by the Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras, in his letter No. 2364 of 1924, dated the 6th January 1925, referring for the decision of the High Court the following question, viz., "Whether the profession-tax levied under s. 111 of the Madras City Municipal Act must be allowed as a deduction from the taxable income as an expenditure incurred solely for the purposes of the profession within the meaning of s. 11 of the Indian Income Tax Act XI of 1922."

Mr. R. N. Iyengar, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This is a reference under s. 66 (2) of the Indian Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), and the question submitted for our opinion is whether profession tax paid under s. 111 of the Madras City Municipal Act should be allowed as an expenditure incurred solely for the purposes of the profession of the assessee within the meaning of s. 11 of the Income Tax Act.

The assessee is a firm of attorneys practising in Madras and they claim that they are entitled to the deduction above mentioned. The Commissioner of Income Tax was of opinion that the deduction claimed was not an allowable item.

The answer to the question put to us depends, in our opinion, upon the nature of the profession tax levied by the Municipality. If the profession tax is a contribution from the income of the assessee to the Municipality it will stand on the same footing as income-tax itself which is such a payment to the Government. It is clear, in assessing the income of a person the income-tax he pays could not be deducted, for what is paid is a part of the income itself and not an expenditure for earning that income or profit. It was so ruled in

Ashton Gas Co. v. Attorney-General (1) and the proposition is conceded before us. What then is profession tax—is it a payment made out of the income of the tax payer or is it expenditure which he has to incur to enable him to earn his income. We are of opinion that it is the former and not the latter.

Under the City Municipal Act (IV of 1919), s. 111, every person not liable for the Companies' tax who within the city and for a period of 60 days in the half year exercises "a profession, art, trade or calling or holds any appointment, public or private, bringing him within the taxation rules in Sch. IV", is liable to pay the profession tax. Now Sch. IV makes it clear that the amount of tax payable is dependent on the income of the person taxed, the minimum being an income of Rs. 100 a month except in the case of hotel-keepers, etc., dealt with under cl. (1a). Professional men are taxed not because they carry on their profession but because they do so and earn an income. The amount of tax varies with the income and if a person is over-taxed, he has a right of appeal.

Now the nature of the tax cannot vary with the individual taxed. In the case of persons holding appointments under the Government, it seems to me impossible to predicate that they pay profession-tax to enable them to earn their salary. Section 111, Explanation 2 makes even pensioners liable for profession tax as if they were holders of appointments carrying a salary equal to the pension. In their cases it is still more difficult to treat the profession tax as a payment by them to earn their income. It is clear in these cases the Municipality is claiming a part of their income as a tax. A different rule it seems to us cannot be applied in the case of men who make their income by professional services. It is argued that because Sch. III uses the words "by way of license fee," we must hold that the payment of the profession tax is for the purpose of obtaining a license to carry on one's profession in the city. We are unable to accept this argument. The Act deals with several matters in which the obtaining of a license is a pre-requisite to the carrying on of a business or profession within the Municipal limits. We find examples of it in Chap. XII of the Act. There is no provision in the Act which makes the carrying on of one's professions without paying the profession tax illegal; and no formal license is issued on payment; the tax if unpaid can no doubt be collected by coercive processes of distraint, etc., but the carrying on of the profession is not interfered with. It is clear, therefore, that the Act does not treat the profession tax as a payment for a license. The words "by way of a license fee" seem to us to show that the payment is to be made in the manner of a license fee but do not imply that in itself the tax is a license fee. It is true that under Part II, Sch. IV, r. 9 the tax is estimated on general considerations and not on the exact amount of ascertained income of the person taxed. This merely provides a method of estimating one's income to avoid the troubles of having accounts produced and examined in every case. The fact that when an over-estimate is made, liberty is given to the person taxed to produce his accounts and prove his income and get his tax reduced indicates that the proper basis of the tax is the income earned. In this view payment of the profession tax cannot be held to be "an expenditure for the purpose of such profession" though it is incurred in connection with it. The words "for the purposes of" were construed by Lord Davey in the case of Strong & Co. v. Woodfield (2) where the expression was "for purposes of the trade". His Lordship observed "These words appear to me to mean for the purpose of enabling a person to carry on and earn profits in the trade, etc., I think the disbursements permitted are such as are made for that purpose. It is not enough that the disbursement is made in the course of, or arises out of, or is connected with, the trade, or is made out of the profits of the trade. It must be made for the purpose of earning the profits". Following that view we consider that the payment of profession tax does not fall within s. 11.

The case of Smith v. Lion Brewery Co. (3) and Usher's Wiltshire Brewery Co. v. Bruce (4) were cited by the learned Council for the assessee. But instead of helping him they show what may properly be treated as money spent for purposes of trade. The expenses referred to in those cases were directly incurred for the purpose of increasing the income of the trade and were, therefore, allowed to be deducted. The cases do not apply in the view we take of the nature of the profession tax. Along with these cases should be considered the case of money spent for an anti-prohibition campaign by a brewer which was disallowed as a deduction as it was held that it was not money directly spent for increasing the brewer's income though it may have indirectly had that effect: See Ward & Co v. Commissioner of Taxes of New Zealand (5).

The case of Commissioner of Income-Tax, Madras v. Nedungadi Bank Ltd. (6) referred to the Companies' tax and not to the profession tax. The observation in it regarding profession tax that it stands on the same footing as income-tax supports the contention of the Government but we do not look upon it as any authority on the point before us as the observation is only an obiter dictum. The case is not otherwise applicable.

Patent Costings Syndicate v. Etherington (7) referred to excess profit duty which stands on a different footing altogether. As pointed out by the learned Judge there it was declared by Statute to be an admissible deduction. Further more the case was one of net profits of the Company on which dividend was payable to the manager and not an income-tax case.

For the above-mentioned reasons we have come to the conclusion that the amount of profession tax paid is not a proper deduction for assessment of income-tax and we answer the question submitted in the negative. The assessee will pay the Commissioner costs and Vakils' fee Rs. 250.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Assansole rejecting an application under O. IX, r. 13 to set aside two decrees which had been passed ex parte. The ground for refusing the application is that it was not maintainable. The facts appear to be these. A certain suit was instituted on the 13th February 1922 for recovery of certain royalty which had been made a charge on the property. A preliminary decree was passed on the 31st October 1924 and the final decree was passed on the 17th November 1924. Both these decrees were passed ex parte. The present applicant is a puisne mortgagee under a mortgage deed executed in June 1921 and is now in possession. Admittedly he was not a party to the suit.

It seems to me that the application was rightly rejected. O. IX, r. 13 provides that "In any case in which a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside; and if he satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree as against him." Now, admittedly the applicant was not a defendant in the suit and he does not come within the purview of O. IX, r. 13. The learned Advocate who appears for him contends that this case comes within s. 146 of the Code which provides as follows: "Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force, where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person, then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him." I do not think that this case comes within the terms of the section.

Section 146 would not, I think, enable a puisne mortgagee who is not a party to the suit to maintain an application under O. IX, r. 13. Let us suppose for the sake of argument he was allowed to make the application and the ex parte decree was set aside. He would surely not be a party to that suit and the defendant could once more allow the suit to be decreed ex parte.

The order of the learned Subordinate Judge is right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. I assess the hearing fee at 3 gold mohurs.

Chakravarti, J.—I agree. The learned Advocate for the appellant relied upon the case of Sitaramaswami v. Dulla Lakshmi Narasamma (1) in support of his contention that a person who was not a party to a suit was held entitled to come under s. 146, C. P. C., and allowed to file an appeal against a final decree. It appears to me that that case is clearly distinguishable for two reasons; first, because the interest of the appellant in that case accrued after the institution of the suit; and the second ground on which I think the present case is distinguishable is that it was not an application under O. IX, r. 13 but an appeal against a final decree. This case, therefore, is no authority for the proposition which the learned Advocate wanted to establish in the present case. I think, therefore, this appeal is not maintainable. I agree therefore with my learned brother that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought on a deed of hypothecation for the recovery of Rs. 200 principal plus Rs. 530 interest, total Rs. 730. The original creditor was one Ulfat Ram and the plaintiffs are his representatives. The main defence pleaded was a complete repayment of the claim and the further contention that other payments in respect of other debts had been made to the widow of Ulfat Ram. On the production of Ulfat Ram's account book it was found to contain in the defendant's account seven entries on the debit side and five on the credit side. The first item on the debit side was strangely enough the item secured by the deed of hypothecation; the other items were unsecured. Of the items on credit side two were specifically appropriated, the other three had not been specifically appropriated to the unsecured debit items but it is significant that the total credits tallied with the total unsecured debits. On these facts the Courts below have concurred in holding that though the main defence is false, the unappropriated credit items must be applied in reduction of the present claim on the hypothecation deed as being the earliest debit, and for this course they have sought and found justification in s. 61 of the Contract Act.

For the plaintiffs it has been urged before us that inasmuch as the debtor did not take advantage of the privilege conferred upon him by s. 59 of the Contract Act, s. 60 of the Act gives the creditor plenary discretion to apply any payment at any time even up to the time of trial to any debt he chooses and after having heard Counsel for both sides we hold that the appeal must succeed.

Now, it is indubitable that when a debtor owes several distinct debts to one person and makes a payment to him, it is the direction either express or implied of the debtor with regard to the application of the payment which governs the payment's destination. A careful consideration of s. 59 of the Indian Contract Act leaves no doubt, however, that that intimation must be synchronous with the payment. Where, however, the debtor has not taken advantage of the power conferred upon him by s. 59, the creditor is at liberty to apply the payment in liquidation of any lawful debt actually due and payable to him from the debtor. The learned Judge in chambers, following Kundan Lal v. Jagan Nath (1), holds that ss. 59, 60 and 61 of the Contract Act were enacted to embody the rule laid down in Clayton's case (2). It holds that the creditor can take advantage of the discretion allowed to him by s. 60 only at the time of the payment and is not at liberty to make any ex post facto appropriation. Now, Clayton's case (2) was based on peculiar facts. The question which the Courts were called upon to decide was whether a customer of a bank was justified in claiming that payments made to him by the Bank, were payments made against particular credit items in his account and not against the account as a whole, and it was held that the payments were made against the whole account and that the creditor was not at liberty to urge ex post facto that particular payments to him should be debited against particular credit items. In that case, however, the learned

Master of the Rolls stated that he was not called upon to determine the general question of the creditor's right to make the application of indefinite payments; so that the decision clearly has no general application. The view that the creditor may apply payments up to the very last moment even up to the time of the trial was adopted in Cory Brothers & Company Limited v. The Owners of the Turkish Steamship "Mecca" (3) and the Seymour v. Pickett (4), and has been followed by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Patna. On the other side is only the ruling* relied upon by the Court below, and the main reason of the view of that Court appears to be that were the law as laid down in Cory Brothers & Co., Ltd. v. The Owner of the Turkish Steamship Mecca (3) accepted, there would remain no scope for the application of s. 61 of the Contract Act which provided that where neither party makes any appropriation, the payment shall be applied in discharge of the debts in order of time. This objection, however, does not impress us, for it is not difficult to imagine cases in which neither party, either by oversight or by mistake, has made any appropriation. Moreover, a Code attempts to provide for all possibilities.

In our opinion the Courts below might well have held on the peculiar circumstances of this case that the original creditor, Ulfat Ram, did appropriate the payments to the unsecured debts, but we are bound by the finding of fact that he did not do so. Holding, however, that s. 60 of the Contract Act grants to the creditors plenary discretion to make the appropriation at all times up to the time of trial (and it is obvious that this rule contravenes no principle of justice or equity), we consider that the plaintiffs at the institution of the suit had appropriated payments to the unsecured debts and were not restricted in the exercise of this discretion to the point of time when the payments were actually made.

We accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and decree in full for the plaintiffs with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued the defendants on an alleged mortgage. The suit was contested on the ground that the mortgage-bond was not duly attested and that no consideration passed and that it was merely a benami transaction. The first Court held in favour of the plaintiffs on the question of attestation but dismissed the suit on the ground that the mortgage was a benami transaction. The lower Appellate Court has held that the bond was not properly attested but has disbelieved the defendants' case that the transaction was benami and has held that the consideration money was paid. He has granted the plaintiffs a decree with a direction that if the defendants do not deposit the decretal dues within three months they will be absolutely debarred from all rights to redeem the property.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that after finding that the bond was not properly attested the lower Appellate Court should not have held that there was a valid mortgage. This decision is based on the finding that the loan was for less than Rs. 100 and that the plaintiffs got possession of the property, so a document was unnecessary. In our opinion on the finding that the bond was not legally attested the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the mortgage had been proved. It is pointed out by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Subramanian v. Lutchman (1) that oral proof cannot be substituted for the written evidence of any contract which the parties have put into writing. There is a further difficulty in the plaintiffs' way. Assuming that the mortgage could be effected by delivery of possession and that this could be proved although the bond has been executed, there is no finding that possession was delivered in order to effect a mortgage. Though the plaintiffs had got possession of the property it is the defendants' case that this possession was obtained by them as adhirs. The first Court accepted the contention of the defendants that the plaintiffs' possession was that of adhirs and that finding had not been reversed by the lower Appellate Court. If the plaintiffs were put in possession as adhirs the finding of the lower Appellate Court would not be sufficient to establish a mortgage by delivery of possession on payment of the money advanced.

On behalf of the respondents it is contended that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the document was not attested is wrong. Reliance is placed on the decision of a Divisional Bench of this Court to which one of us was a party in Jagannath Khan v. Bajrang Das Agarwala (2). What was held in that case was that the writer of a mortgage-bond may be a competent witness to prove its execution. It was certainly not held that a witness who signs the bond before the mortgagor is a witness who has attested the bond as required by s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. Though the bond cannot be proved as a mortgage-bond it is no bar to its being admitted in evidence if it is regarded as a simple bond for payment of money. In the case of Tafaluddi Peada v. Mahar Ali Shaha (3) it was held that when a suit is brought upon a mortgage-bond although the mortgage is held to be invalid on the ground that the requirements of s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act were not satisfied the plaintiff is entitled to recover upon the covenant, the money which the defendant covenanted to pay. In this case, therefore, the bond though not admissible to prove a mortgage is admissible to prove a covenant to repay money, and on this covenant the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for the amount that has been decreed by the lower Appellate Court.

The appeal is accordingly allowed to this extent:—The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified by striking out the last sentence, "defendant do deposit the decretal dues within three months, on default defendants be absolutely debarred from all right to redeem the property."

As the appeal has been only partially successful the parties will bear their own costs in this Court except as regards the minor respondents whose costs have already been paid.

The interest in a public trust for the purposes of a suit under s. 92, C. P. C., must be clear, present and substantial and not remote and fictitious or purely illusory or a mere contingency. Persons who reside in the neighbourhood of a mosque without being habitual worshippers in it or in any manner specially interested in it, although as Muhammadans they may have a right to offer prayers therein, do not possess sufficient "interest in the trust" within the meaning of s. 92, C. Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in O. S. No. 11 of 1919.

JUDGMENT.

Odgers, J.—In this case four plaintiffs Muhammadans brought a suit under s. 92 of the C. P. C. for the removal of the defendant from the management of mosque Pallivasal in Ellaimankoil Street, Tanjore and for consequential reliefs including a scheme for the management of the said mosque. The 1st plaintiff is stated in the plaint to reside at Chunnambukara Street, the 2nd plaintiff at Kollupettai Street, 3rd at Attumanthai Street, and the 4th out of Fort, Tanjore.

The appeal has been argued before us on the point of want of interest of the plaintiffs under the section of the C. P. C. and also with a view to establishing certain charges set out in plaint para. 8 (f) (g) (i) and (l) in order to prove certain mismanagement in respect of the temple accounts and property. The learned Judge has dismissed the suit on all points and I shall proceed to deal with the first point, that of interest as, in my opinion, the appeal can be disposed of on that ground.

The defendant in his written statement alleges that the plaintiffs are not residents of the locality, nor do they live close to the plaint mosque. They have never worshipped in the mosque nor have they any right to do so. By a stone inscription, Ex. B appearing in the mosque, it would seem that Babu Vaidyar erected the mosque about the year 1817 or 1848. Exhibit A is a settlement deed of 1879 by one Amir Khan Sahib, grandson of the founder in which he settles Rs. 4,000 worth of property for the benefit of the charity established by his ancestors in the mosque in Elliamankoil Street, Tanjore, and appoints his foster son who is the defendant to enjoy the trust property and apply the income to it. On the evidence the learned Judge has found that the 1st plaintiff who is the duffadar of the District Court of Tanjore lives far away from the plaint mosque there being three other mosques nearer to his house and that his opportunities for attending the plaint mosque are limited to the occasions when he happens to visit his second wife when she is living in her mother's house. The 2nd plaintiff says that he attended the mosque when he went to his brother's house for meals. As there is ill-feeling between the two, it is improbable that he would go to his brother's house for this purpose. He admits that he had not been to the mosque in the month of Ramzan for the past seven or eight years, or on the 12th day of the Barabafat month all of which are festive occasions among Muhammadans. The 3rd plaintiff is a native of some village in Pudukottah and admittedly he went for prayers to one or other of the two mosques which are near his shop and would appear to have no occasion to go to this mosque in the Elliammankoil Street. Fourth plaintiff lives in the same street as the 3rd. He admits that he had been employed in different places in different capacities for the last 10 or 15 years and, consequently he would have had no opportunity of going to this mosque for prayers. There are further other mosques near his house, three within half a furlong and one within a furlong. He says he used to go to Elliamman Street to collect moneys for his employer. He, however, admits that he has not for the last 2½ years gone to that street for this purpose. It is, therefore, found by the learned Judge and in fact admitted by the learned Vakil for the appellants that none of these plaintiffs can be said to be habitual worshippers of the plaint mosque. Mr. P. R. Ganapathi Iyer for the appellants contends first that every Muhammadan is entitled as such to attend any mosque for worship, and this may be at once admitted to be correct. He relies not only on this but also on the fact that the plaintiffs are residents of the locality and his contention is that these two points, v. e., right to worship and residence in the locality taken together would afford the interest acquired under s. 92. The test to be applied has been authoritatively laid down as far as we are concerned by the judgment in Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbi (1). That was a well-known case in which Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer claimed interest as a member of the Hindu community and, thereby alleged title to institute a suit in respect of a temple in Tellichery. In the full and instructive judgment delivered in that case by Wallis, C. J., the history of the provision of law is traced and the learned Chief Justice came to the conclusion that in order to entitle a plaintiff to sue under the section "he must have a clear interest in the particular trust over and above that which millions of his countrymen may be said to have by virtue of their religion." The learned Chief Justice after referring to the amendment of the section which originally contained the words "direct interest" was of opinion that even after the amendment the words "interest in trust" must still, in Lord Eldon's words, be 'a clear interest' that is to say, a present and substantial, and not a remote and fictitious or purely illusory interest and further "that interest if the provision is not to be altogether illusory, must arise from some special relation in which the plaintiff stands to the endowment in question as compared with the whole body of religious community throughout India." On a difference of opinion between the learned Chief Justice and Kumaraswami Sastri, J., who took the view that the right of worship in a particular temple is sufficient interest under the section, the case was referred to three learned Judges of this Court one of whom was Abdul Rahim, J. Had this learned Judge said in his judgment anything particularly applicable to mosques as distinguished from temples, it would in my view have earned great weight. He agreed with Kumaraswami Sastri, J., and held with him that the section gave the right to institute actions to secure proper administration of temples and mosques to all persons who have a right of attendance and worship at these religious foundations. The majority of the Court, however, Oldfield and Coutts Trotter, J.J., held otherwise and agreed with the judgment of the Chief Justice. Oldfield, J., in the course of his judgment said: "Proof of residence in the neighbourhood of the institution will no doubt be one way of establishing possession of an interest, not by any analogy with the rights of parishioners in England, but on the simpler ground that those who live near to the institution will be most likely to take advantage of its benefits."

(1) 50 Ind. Cas. 693; 42 M. 360, 36 M. L. J. 396, 25 M. L. T. 304, 9 L. W. 492, (1919) M. W. N. 370.

It would, therefore, seem that the test of locality is only to be applied in relation to actual user of the temple or mosque by the inhabitants residing close to it. Coutts Trotter, J., was distinctly of opinion that the right to worship in a temple was not equivalent to interest and refused to import the definition in s. 15 of the Religious Endowments Act (As Wallis, C. J., had refused to do before) in order to interpret the meaning of s. 92, C. P. C. "The learned Judge continued. "In so far as the decided cases suggest a limitation, the limitation suggested is that of living in the neighbourhood of the institution in question and habitually resorting thereto for purposes of worship." On that, one can be asked "what is your definition of neighbourhood?" "What is your definition of habitual resorting?" The learned Judge confessed that no universally applicable formula in answer to these questions could be discovered. All that can be done is to say that the interest required by the Statute must be clear, present and substantial and not a remote and fictitious or purely illusory interest or an existing interest and not a mere contingency. Beyond that the learned Judge was of opinion that the question was a pure question of fact, and must be left to the Court to decide on a consideration of the particular circumstances of each case. The latest case in the Privy Council Vaidyanatha Ayyar v. Swaminatha Ayyar (2) does not touch the present matter. It seems to me unnecessary in the light of the judgment of the majority of Judges in Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbi (1) to examine the earlier cases on the subject and applying that case to the facts of this case as previously set out, it appears to me that it cannot be said that the plaintiffs had anything but an illusory or fictitious interest in this mosque. They either did not worship there at all or worshipped on such rare occasions and such long intervals that they cannot be said to have a real or clear interest as required by the decision. It appears to me perfectly clear that Mr. P. R. Ganapathi Iyer's suggestion is that the residents of the same town have the requisite interest even if they do not worship at the particular temple or mosque in question. It is, however, clear on the decision in Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbi (1) that so long as they have the right to do so, they must be shown to have some interest over and above the rest of the residents of the locality of their own community who are entitled as members of that community to take part in the worship conducted in the institution. This the plaintiffs are not shown to possess. We are referred to one decision in Garuda Sanyasayya v. Nerella Muthemma (3) where the point arose but is dismissed in three lines of the judgment. It was a case of choultry and the learned Judges held that as the plaintiffs were residents in the locality in which the choultry was situated and were members of the community for whose benefit the charity was founded, it was sufficient to give them interest to institute a suit for its management. Wallis, C. J., was one of the Judges who decided that case which was prior to this decision in Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbi (1). In my opinion, therefore, the learned Judge in this case was right in dismissing the suit on the point of want of interest in the plaintiffs.

It is unnecessary in the view I take on this point to discuss the question of the charges. But I may add that having carefully considered the matter I should, if necessary, be of opinion that none of the charges have been established against the defendant. On all these grounds, therefore, it appears to me that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Madhavan Nair, J.—This appeal by the plaintiffs arises in a suit instituted by them under s. 92 of the C. P. C. in which they prayed for the removal of the defendant from the management of the plaint musjid (mosque) and its endowments for the appointment of new trustees, for the taking of accounts and for a scheme for the proper management of the mosque. The plaint mosque is situated in Elliamankoil Street, Tanjore, and was founded by Bappu Vaidyar in Hijiri 1243 (1817-1818). On the 1st of November 1879, Amir Khan Shih, the grandson of Bappu Vaidyar and last of the family of the original founder made a settlement, Ex. I, by which he endowed the mosque with some property and appointed his foster-son "as the person entitled to enjoy the property endowed for charity and to carry out the charity by means of its income" specifying in the deed the main objects for which the income of the properties was to be utilised. The plaintiffs alleged in their plaint that they resided close to the mosque and were interested in it and in the trusts relating thereto, that the defendant was not the de jure or rightful trustee, that he had committed various breaches of trust and that, in consequence he should be removed from the management of the mosque and its properties. The defendant in his written statement pointed out that the plaintiffs were not residents of the locality, that they had interest in the plaint mosque as contemplated by s. 92 of the C. P. C. that he was "not only the de facto but the de jure trustee also" and that he was not guilty of any of the breaches of trust specified in the plaint. Various issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge dealing with the allegations in the pleadings, but the appellants, confined their arguments only to the finding of the Subordinate Judge as regards five issues these being.—Issue I. "whether the plaintiffs have sufficient interest in the plaint mosque and is the suit sustainable."

Issue II "whether the defendant is not a de jure trustee?"

Issue V "whether item 3 of Sch. A of the plaint ever belonged to the trust?"

Issue VIII "whether the defendant has committed all or any of the breaches of the trust alleged in the plaint and is he liable to be removed from the trusteeship?" and

Issue IX "whether a scheme is necessary and if so, on what terms?"

The learned Subordinate Judge found against the plaintiffs on all these issues and, in consequence, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The first question to be considered is whether the plaintiffs or any of them have the "interest" in the trust within the meaning of s. 92 of the C. P. C., entitling them to maintain the suit. As the decision of this question will to some extent depend upon the facts of the case, it is necessary to state in some detail the evidence bearing on it and my conclusion thereon before dealing with the cases relied on by the appellant's learned Vakil. The 1st plaintiff who is examined as the 10th witness for the plaintiff has been in Government service since 1883, and since 1890 he is employed in the District Court of Tanjore as a duffadar. His place of residence since 1902 is Chunnambukara Street which is five or six furlongs off from the plaint mosque situated in Ellaimmankoil Street. He states that his grandfather had a house opposite to the mosque and he lived in it for thirty years and has then gone often and offered prayers in the mosque. The latter statement is not supported by independent evidence. His grandfather's house has been sold to the defendant's brothers. He married in 1891 his second wife who has a house in Elliammankoil Street. When she lived with her mother for seven or eight years on account of her quarrel with his first wife, he states that he used to visit her and then used to go to this mosque in the morning on Sundays and in the evening on other days. He admits that there are two mosques within about two furlongs from his house. As duffadar he states that he was to be in Court at 10-30 A. M. and until such time as the District Judge sits and that while on duty in Court he used to make prayer only if he had time. Although according to their religion the Muhammadans were to offer prayers five times a day, the evidence shows that it is not necessary to make these prayers in the mosque as they may be offered at any place where they happen to be at the time. Though this witness says that he has been offering prayers in this mosque regularly, the evidence of the defendant is that this witness has never gone to the plaint mosque for offering prayers. It is to be noticed that there are mosques which are nearer to his present place of residence than the plaint mosque. The evidence in the case seems to suggest that though he may have offered prayers in this mosque, he might have done so only on those occasions when he happened to visit his second wife when she lived in her mother's house. It may be noticed that he has till now instituted four scheme suits and he does not appear to be a man of means.

The 2nd plaintiff is examined as the plaintiff's first witness. He has been living in Pambatti or Kalapathi Street outside the Fort away from the musjid for the past seven or eight years. Previous to that, it is true, he lived in Survappa Lane about one and a half furlongs from this mosque, but he does not seem to have been a regular worshipper in the mosque. He states that he used to go to the plaint mosque for prayer once in in two or three days for the past seven or eight years. It is difficult to believe that he speaks the truth when he makes this statement. He admits that there is in the street, in which he lives a musjid about a hundred yards off from his house, and there are also other mosques nearer to his house. No special reason is assigned for his going to the plaint mosque for worship than to the mosques, nearer to his residence. He states that he has a shop in the Ayyankadai near the mosque that his brother lives in the fourth house from the plaint mosque and that he used to go to his brother's house from his shops for meals. It is suggested in the evidence of D. W. No. 2 his brother that there is ill-feeling between the two brothers and it is hardly likely that he would have taken meals in his brother's house. This witness admits that he has not gone into the musjid during the past seven or eight years in the month of Romzan or on the twelfth day of the Barahafat month—both important festive occasions in Muhammadan mosques. On the defendant's side it is stated that this witness used to go very rarely to the plaint mosque for offering prayers. The witness states that he has not been on speaking terms with the defendant in this case for the past ten or twelve years owing to ill-feeling. It appears to me from this evidence that this witness might have only occasionally visited the mosque for offering prayers.

The 3rd and 4th plaintiffs are examined as the 8th and 9th witnesses for the plaintiffs. Their evidence is not of much importance. Plaintiff witness No. 8, a native of Puddukottah is a trader and lives near Pambattikara Street, in which there is a mosque and near which also there is another one. He admits that he used to offer prayers there. He has no dealings in Ellaiamankoil Street in which the plaint mosque is situated and his occasions to go there are few. He does not remember how many years ago he went to the plaint mosque first. Plaintiff witness No. 9 also like the other witnesses says that he offered prayers in this mosque, but it is extremely doubtful if he has so done except very rarely. He lives away from the mosque and has been employed in different places which would suggest that he would have had no opportunity to go to this mosque. There are mosques near his place of residence. He states that he went inside this mosque one and a half or two years ago.

My conclusion from the summary of the evidence given above is that, though the plaintiffs may be said to reside in the neighbourhood of the mosque, they are not habitual worshippers in it, nor are they in any manner specially interested in the mosque, though as Muhammadans they like the others have admittedly a right to offer prayers there. There are mosques nearer their places of residence which makes it unlikely that they would have gone to this mosque for worship frequently. The evidence also suggests that the plaintiffs in instituting this suit are not actuated by considerations relating to the improvement in the administration of the mosque and its properties.

In these circumstances, the question of law to be considered is whether the plaintiffs have the interest in the trust contemplated by s. 92 of the C. P. C. What is the nature of that "interest" has been elaborately considered in the Letters Patent Appeal in Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbi (1). In that case a suit was instituted under s. 92 of the C. P. C. for the removal of the trustees of a temple at Tellicherry and for other reliefs. One of the plaintiffs was Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer. His interest in the trust entitling him to institute the suit was not based on the fact that he had worshipped in that temple once or twice when he went to Tellicherry in his professional capacity some eight or ten years ago, nor upon the fact that he was the President of the Dharama Rakshana Smbha but solely upon his right which he as a Hindu has of worshipping in every Hindu temple throughout India. It was there held that the mere right of a Hindu plaintiff to worship in a temple is not such an interest in the trust as to entitle him to sue under s. 92. It was argued that every Hindu temple must be presumed to be dedicated for the use of all Hindus and that each of the individuals has, therefore, an interest in the trust of every Hindu temple. This argument was overruled by Wallis, C. J., who after an exhaustive examination of the history of the section and of the case law relating to it held that interest in the trust must be "a clear interest" that is to say "a present and substantial and not a remote or fictitious or purely illusory interest," and also that that interest "if the provision is not to be altogether illusory must arise from special relation in which the plaintiff stands to the endowment in question as compared with the whole body of religious community through out India." His Lordship also expressed the view that "the bare possibility, however, remote, that a Hindu might desire to resort to a particular temple gives him an interest in the trust appears to defeat the object with which the Legislature inserted these words in the section." The majority of the learned Judges who heard the Letters Patent Appeal on a difference of opinion between the learned Chief Justice and Kumaraswami Sastri, J., accepted the opinion of the learned Chief Justice. As his judgment shows, the observations therein on the question before me apply with equal force to the case of Muhammadans worshipping in Muhammadan mosques also. In Vaidyanatha Ayyar v. Sawaminatha Ayyar (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council expressed approval of the opinion of Wallis C. J. already quoted. In that case the suit under s. 92, C. P. C. related to a chattaram and its properties and one of the questions for decision was whether the plaintiffs had the interest in the trust contemplated by that section. On that point their Lordships were of opinion that the fact that "the plaintiffs are descendants although only in female lines of the founder of the chattaram gave them an interest in the proper administration of the trust sufficient to enable them to maintain this suit, although they themselves may never find it necessary to use the chattaram as a rest house or to obtain food there". Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar does not call into question the correctness of the decision in Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbi (1), but argues that the case is an authority for the proposition that, if the plaintiffs reside in the neighbourhood of the suit institution such residence coupled with their admitted right to worship therein necessarily gives them the interest entitling them to institute the suit under s. 92, C. P. C. In support of this argument reference is made to certain passages in the judgment of Oldfield, J., and of Coutts-Trotter, J., but on examination it will be found that these passages do not lend any support to the argument advanced by the learned Vakil. Oldfield, J., states, that "proof of residence in the neighbourhood of the institution will no doubt be one way of establishing possession of an interest, not by any analogy with the rights of parishioners in England, but on the simpler ground that those who live near to the institution will be most likely to take advantage of its benefits." I have no doubt that by this statement the learned Judge did not mean to lay down as a proposition of law that residence in the locality coupled with the admitted right to worship in a temple or mosque means possession of an interest within the meaning of s. 92. The context makes it clear that, according to the learned Judge's view, proof of residence in the neighbourhood will be one of important facts to be considered in an enquiry regarding the question whether a plaintiff who has a right to worship possesses the interest in the trust contemplated by the section. The same is the view of, Coutts-Trotter, J., also. It seems to me that to a very large extent the question as to whether any particular person has or has not an interest within the meaning of s. 92, C. P. C. is mainly a question of fact to be decided on a consideration of the circumstances of each case. The question was so treated in Gopala Krishnier v. Ganapathy Aiyar (4) for the learned Judge, Sadasiva Iyer, who delivered the judgment, states thus "The first question argued in this appeal is whether the plaintiffs have got the necessary substantial interest to institute the suit having regard to the Full Bench decision in Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbi (1) On the evidence taken on remand, I am clearly of opinion that the plaintiffs have got such a substantial interest." The decision in Garuda Sunyasayya v. Nerella Muthemma (3) also does not support the position taken up by the appellants. Dealing with the question whether the plaintiffs have the interest to institute the suit under s. 92 Wallis, C. J. and Seshagiri Iyer, J. state "They are residents of the locality in which the choultry is situated and are members of the community for whose benefit the charity was founded. In our opinion, these facts, give them sufficient interest to institute the suit." It is clear that residence in the locality is to be treated only as a question of fact from which an inference may be drawn regarding the question whether a plaintiff who has a right to worship in a temple or mosque has or has not an interest to institute the suit. The other decisions quoted to us need not be discussed as all of them have been elaborately considered by the learned Chief Justice in Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbi (1) in dealing with the history of s. 92 of the C. P. C. I think that the facts of the case clearly show that though the plaintiffs reside in the neighbourhood, they really have no present and substantial interest in the suit mosque. Their interest in it is only fictitious or illusory. Being Muhammadans, they are no doubt entitled to worship in the mosque, but they are only occasional worshippers and, in my opinion, do not possess "the interest" entitling them to institute the suit under s. 92, C. P. C. as explained in Ramachandra Iyer v. Parameswaran Munbi (1).

The question raised by Issue II is whether the defendant is not a de jure trustee. The learned Subordinate Judge found on this issue against the plaintiffs. The case for the appellants on this issue presented before us by their Vakil is somewhat different from the one raised by them in their plaint and considered by the learned Subordinate Judge. Paragraph 7 of the plaint states, "the defendant was appointed by the said Amir Khan Sahib to be a person entitled to keep the enjoyment of the properties endowed from the charity and to conduct the charities out of the income of the same. The defendant is not appointed to be the trustee of the musjid assuming such appointment would be validly made, but he has been made de facto trustee of the musjid ever since the arrangement evidenced by the said document and ever since Amir Khan Sahib's death." No doubt the question as regards the validity of his appointment as trustee is referred to by the defendant in the written statement but the case raised by the plaintiffs (as may be seen from the paragraph quoted) is this, namely, that Amir Khan Sahib did not appoint the defendant as trustee of the musjid but only appointed him "to keep the enjoyment of the properties endowed for the charity and to conduct the charities out of the income," thereby drawing a distinction between a 'trustee of the mosque and a manager of the properties.' This argument was overruled by the Subordinate Judge and has not been availed of before us by the learned Vakil as obviously Ex. I the deed of settlement does not support it and there is no other evidence to justify it. What has been argued before us is this, namely, that Amir Khan Sahib had no power to appoint the defendant as his successor. It is true that as foster-son the defendant is not entitled to lay any hereditary claim to the trusteeship, but Amir Khan Sahib was himself a muttawalli and it is a well-known principle of Muhammadan Law that, in the absence of the rules laid down by the founder of the mosque, the 'muttawalli' for the time being may validly appoint a successor to himself. The present defendant was so appointed in 1879 and, in my opinion, he is a validly appointed trustee.

Issue V raised the question, whether item 3 of Sch. A of the plaint ever belonged to the trust? This item consists of two shops. The appellants' case is that they formed the mosque property and that the defendant sold them to his brother against the interest of the trust, the defendant's case being that they were his absolute private property. It is conceded that there is no document showing that these shops ever belonged to the mosque. It is admitted that the mosque has no other properties except those left to it by Amir Khan Sahib under Ex. I and it is not disputed that these two shops are not included in Ex. I. In this connection our attention has been drawn to Exs. II, III, IV, V and V (a). In these documents which dealt with a house which was mortgaged and afterwards sold, Khadar Batcha's shops (viz., these shops belonging to Khadar Batcha the defendant) are described as one of the boundaries and the 1st plaintiff has attested them. It has been argued before us that these documents are legally inadmissible in evidence, but this objection does not seem to have been taken in the lower Court, nor has it been raised in the grounds of appeal before us. Even if we ignore these documents, it follows from what has been pointed out above that these shops do not belong to the mosque. The plaintiffs rely on a recital in Ex. XVI the sale-deed under which the defendant conveyed these two shops to his brother Moideen Batcha (D. W. No. 4). The recital is that the shops in question "were originally enjoyed by Amir Khan Sahib and are now enjoyed by me." In view of the admitted fact that all the properties belonging to the mosque were endowed to it under Ex. I and that Ex. I does not contain the shops in question, the statement in Ex. XVI is not as important as it might otherwise be. The defendant offers his own explanation and that has been accepted by the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs themselves have no personal knowledge of the endowment of the shops of the mosque. In my opinion, there is no reliable evidence on the plaintiffs' side to show that these two shops belonged to the mosque. In view of the admitted facts of the case and Ex. 1, I am satisfied that the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived at a correct conclusion on this issue.

Issue VIII relates to the question whether the defendant has committed all or any of the breaches of trust alleged in the plaint and is he liable to be removed from the trusteeship? In the plaint fourteen specific breaches of trust are alleged against the defendant but the learned Vakil for the appellants in his arguments before us has confined his attention mainly to charge (1) namely, that "no proper accounts are maintained by the defendant." Even here he did not deal with all the various circumstances discussed by the learned Subordinate Judge under this head. He had limited his arguments mainly to a consideration of the income and expenditure of the mosque and the general irregularities in the keeping of accounts by the defendant. As regards the income and expenditure the case of the plaintiffs is that the lands should yield about 500 *kalam*s a year or at least 200 *kalam*s after 1911 as spoken to by the defendant himself and that the expenditure would at the highest even according to the defendant amount to only about Rs. 300 while the evidence on the defendant's side is that the income would be about Rs. 250 all of which had to be spent for the expenses of the mosque. The evidence on the side of the plaintiffs as regards the income from the plaint lands is extremely unsatisfactory. On this point we have been referred to the evidence of P. W. No. 1. He states that the lands will yield an annual income of 500 *kalam*s of paddy, that he saw the lands for the first time two or three years prior to the institution of the suit when he went to the locality to ascertain their condition. He went and saw the lands along with two or three others, but he does not remember them now. At the time when he saw them the lands were not cultivated. From what he saw he could not say whether the lands were in good or bad condition. He does not know personally the income of these lands. It is clear that this witness knows nothing about the lands in question, least of all about the income. According to this witness it would cost Rs 500 to conduct all the charities mentioned in Ex. 1. Plaintiff witness No. 10 makes a vague statement that the net income of these lands per year would be Rs. 700 for the past eight or ten years and that prior to it the income would be Rs. 600 or Rs. 500. He does not give particulars justifying his statements. He states that for the last seven or eight years paddy is sold at from Rs. 2-12 to Rs. 4 per kalam, but there is no independent evidence to support it. According to him the expenses would come to over Rs. 600 in all per annum. In the absence of reliable and disinterested evidence on the side of the plaintiffs, we have to accept the evidence given on the defendant's side. Here it is pertinent to remark that the appellants themselves have sought to support their case more by relying upon the evidence given by the defence than on the evidence given by the plaintiff's own witness. It is admitted that, when the defendants took up the management of the trust in 1879, the lands of the mosque consisted of both nanja and punja, that the punja lands yielded nothing and that he connected them into nanja lands by spending his own money and thus made the lands more valuable for the trust. As D W. No. 1 the defendant states, "When I took up the management the *nanja*s yielded only 60 or 70 *kalam*s and the punja lands did not yield anything. Then one kalam of paddy was sold at from 14 annas to Rs. 1-1-0." He states that "from 1911 onwards these lands yielded on an average 200 or 210 or 220 *kalam*s. As the price of the paddy is now high the income of these lands would now be enough to meet the expenses in the mosque. But previously when paddy was sold at a low price, I was spending my own money for the expenses of the mosque. The price of the other articles has also arisen just like paddy." Defendant witness No. 3 states that he does not know the income; but approximately a sum of Rs 200 or Rs. 300 would be spent in the mosque. Defendant witness No 6 states that the defendant would spend in all about Rs. 200 or Rs 250 a year and the lands would also yield only Rs. 200 or Rs. 250. The finding of the Subordinate Judge that the accounts show that the defendant has advanced a sum of Rs 4,027-6 0 to the mosque has not been challenged before us. It is true that the defendant has appropriated Rs. 829-6-0 from the trust funds towards his advance. The defendant seems to have entertained a mistaken idea that as the charity is his own, he has the rights to do additional charities at his own expense and afterwards appropriate the same from the lands at the time when they yielded. The general effect of the evidence on the defendant's side is that the trust is evidently a poor one owning only a few properties which were not worth very much and that the defendant carried on the management as best as he could making both ends meet. Whenever there was a deficiency of income he supplied funds from his own pocket. In my opinion, it has not been proved that in any particular year or for any number of years there remained any appreciable surplus from the income of the temple lands after meeting the ordinary and the extraordinary expenses of the mosque and its repairs.

As regards the accounts, what has been pressed before us by the learned Vakil for the appellants is that they have been kept very irregularly. The defendant's own evidence discloses many irregularities in the keeping of the accounts. It is admitted amongst other things that he did not write these accounts daily but only once a month, that he destroyed the papers wherefrom the entries in the account-books were copied, that he has mislaid his own funds with those of the trust and that he does not know to write the accounts properly. These various irregularities are referred to and dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge in paras. 51 and 52 of his judgment. Though the conduct of the defendant in this matter cannot be approved by us, we have no doubt that the irregularities pointed out in the circumstances of this case do not justify us in holding that he should be removed on that account. I have examined the accounts of the mosque ranging from the year 1879 and in the ordinary course of things it will be too much to expect one to preserve all the vouchers for the various entries during this long period of about fifty years. It is true that the accounts are written in a very small book, but we have to remember that the trust is also a small one with a small income arising only from a single source and with expenses which do not range over many heads. Entries on account of the income and expenses cannot, therefore, be very large in number and this must account for the smallness of the account-book. The charge that the account-book has been written up after the institution of this suit, though suggested in the course of the argument, has not really been pressed before us and there is very little evidence to support it. The important facts to be noticed are that no specific misappropriation by the defendant of the trust funds has been pointed out, that it has not been shown that there is any clear false entry in the accounts or that there has been a failure on the part of the defendant to enter any item of income in them. The correctness of the entries regarding the expenditure has not been challenged. In his report in examination by the Court the defendant states that he does not use the trust funds for his private purposes. The correctness of this statement has not been disputed. Though the account-book has not been kept in an ideal manner, the defendant has not misappropriated any of the funds of the trust and has not written up false accounts. He has admittedly spent large funds of his own for the purposes of the trust. In these circumstances, I do not think that the irregularities pointed out are sufficient to remove the defendant from the management of the trust.

The next charge of breach of trust has been pressed against the defendant is that he has broken the direction in Ex. I, the settlement-deed to give in the name of Muhammad Nabi feast in the month of Ramzan and this involves an allegation that the defendant has altered the direction contained in the settlement-deed to suit his own purposes. If this charge is found to be true, that by itself will be enough to remove any trustee. This is not mentioned as a specific charge of breach of trust against the defendant in the items (a) to (n) mentioned in para. 8 of the plaint, but it has been dealt with by the lower Court in its judgment, paras. 37 and 38 and it has also been argued before us. Exhibit I contains the following directions: "Out of the income derived from that property, (1) the musjid lights be lighted every day, (2) extra lights should be kept there on festive days, (3) a kathib should be nominated to recite the vedam (koran) in the musjid on monthly pay, (4) feeding should be arranged for in the name of Muhammad Nabi in the Ramzan month and (5) one or two persons should be fed every day". The plaintiffs' case is that the word "Ramzan" which really is the month referred to in Ex. I has been altered into "Rabbisani" by the defendant and that, as a matter of fact, he has not been complying with the real direction contained in Ex. I to feed the Muhammadans in the month of Ramzan.

The defendant's case is that he has really made no alteration in Ex. I that in the month of Ramzan all Muhammadans fast during day time, that no feast can be given during that month and that the feeding is in the month of Rabbisani. As regards the alteration, the volume containing this document was sent for from the Registrar's office by the Subordinate Judge and in that, it was found that the word written is "Ramzan" and not "Rabbisani" Ex. A, the registration copy of Ex. Y also contains the word "Ramzani". It must be said that there is an alteration in Ex. I regarding the month. Whoever made the alteration, I am not satisfied that it was the defendant who made it. If the plaintiffs wanted to charge the defendant with the express alteration of this document in one of its important particulars, they should have done so in the plaint which would have given the defendant an opportunity to meet it. The charges with regard to feeding mentioned in the plaint are clauses (f) and (g), namely, (f) "no food is given by the defendant to any person daily and no public feeding made by the defendant in Ramzan or any other occasion; (g) nothing is done in Ramzan month either according to Muhammadan religion and custom or according to the terms of the deed of 1879". These charges are met by the defendant in his written statement. The charge with which I am now dealing, viz., that that defendant has altered a direction contained in Ex. I seems to have been suggested and that only very faintly, in the course of the examination of the defendant. The evidence on this point that has been referred to by the learned Vakil for the appellants is what is spoken to by the defendant on the last day of his examination (3rd September 1921) which commenced the 13th July 1921. When he was re-called on the 3rd of September 1921, he stated thus:—"I produced in Court the two copies shown to me. My Vakil asked me to search and find them out if available, (the two copies referred to are Exs. XIX and XIX (a). "I got them from my records. They have been in my custody for the past 40 years. I filed Ex. I, one before the Tahsildar and one on another occasion in the Jilla Court and obtained succession certificate. Sivabiran Pillai who wrote Ex. I died eight years ago. I filed Ex. I in Courts and offices only after it was registered." In another place in the evidence given by the defendants we find, at page 52, that he states "In Ex. I it is written as Ramzan." No other evidence has been brought to our notice regarding this alteration. If the plaintiffs wanted to charge the defendant with this alteration in the settlement-deed, they should, in the first place, have stated it as a specific charge in the plaint itself and really cross-examined the defendant regarding the same. On the other hand, we find that no such thing has been done. The defendant while he was in the witness-box was not asked any question by the plaintiffs directly as to how the alteration in Ex. I which was in his possession was brought about. The document came into his possession from Amir Khan. The evidence is to the effect that feeding on a large scale is generally given in the month of Rabbisani. Amir Khan himself have, therefore, made this alteration after the registration of the document, and probably it was such an altered document that came into the possession of the defendant. There is absolutely no motive for the defendant to make this alteration. In the absence of clear evidence to show that the defendant has altered Ex. I we cannot infer that the alteration complained of was brought about by him. As regards feeding in the month of Rabbisani I am satisfied from the evidence that the defendant has complied with the provisions of Ex. I. Though the 2nd plaintiff says that feeding should be done in this mosque in the month of Ramzan, he has to admit that feeding is done in other mosques in the month of Rabbisani. It is generally admitted that all Muhammadans fast during day time in Ramzan and during night they take kani. The 1st plaintiff states that Amir Khan fed people in the month of Ramzan, but he does not know whether the defendant did as a trustee or in his private capacity or out of what funds; and he also states that according to Muhammadan religion people are fed in the month of Rabbisani. The evidence on this point is dealt with at great length by the Subordinate Judge in para. 38 of his judgment. I do not think it necessary to pursue this point any further, as it is not the case of the plaintiffs that the defendant did not feed people in the month of Rabbisani (see P. W. No. 10's (i. e. 1st plaintiff's) evidence p. 34). The evidence of the defendant that feeding is generally done in the month of Rabbisani and that he has been so feeding the Muhammadans has been believed by the Subordinate Judge. Charges (f) and (g) though referred to have not been specially pressed before us by the learned Vakil for the appellants, for there is abundant evidence that kanji was distributed to all the devotees who go to the mosque in the evening during the month of Ramzan. On a consideration of the evidence in the case, I am not satisfied that the defendant's continuance in the office which he has held ever since 1879 is incompatible with the interests of the institution and that he should be removed from its management.

It was suggested that, even if there is no case made out for removing the defendant from the management of the mosque, we should frame a scheme for its management. In view of the evidence in the case that has been put before us, we do not think that we are called upon to formulate any scheme.

In the result the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Babu Charu Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order granting an application for restitution. The original decree was passed on the 12th June 1916. In execution of that decree certain money was realised by the appellants on the 17th February 1917. The decree was reversed on appeal on the 7th January 1920. There was a further appeal to this Court and the decree of the Appellate Court was affirmed on the 20th December 1921. This application for restitution was made on the 9th February 1923. On the authorities it is clear that the period of limitation is three years under Art. 181 of the Limitation Act [see Asutosh Goswami v. Upendra Prosad Mitra (1)]. The point we have to decide is whether this period of limitation runs from the 7th January 1920 when the decree of the first Court was set aside or from the date of its confirmation on second appeal to this Court.

In our opinion the lower Courts are right in holding that the time should be calculated from the later date. Though the facts are not the same we think the principles in the case of Uma Charan Chakrabarti v. Nibaran Chandra Chakrabarti (2) are applicable in the present case. Their attention has been drawn to the lucid exposition of Mr. Justice Dwarka Nath Mitter in the case of Ram Charan v. Lakhi Kanta (3) of the true effect of the disposal of an appeal upon the decree of the primary Court:—"If the decree of the lower Court is reversed by the Appellate Court, it is absolutely dead and gone. If, on the other hand, it is affirmed by the Appellate Court, it is equally dead and gone, though in a different way, namely, by being merged in the decree of the Superior Court, which takes its place for all intents and purposes. Both the decrees cannot exist simultaneously." On the passing of the decree by this Court in second appeal the petitioners had a right to apply for restitution within three years of that decree, and this they have done.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal. We make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment of the defendants. The plaintiff alleges that he purchased the jama which belonged originally to one Madhab Sardar in March 1908, the defendants are under-rayats on whom he served notice under s 49 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that he is entitled to khas possession. Various pleas were raised in defence such as the plaintiff had not purchased any interest in the property; that he is not the sole owner of the holding and that the defendants were occupancy rayats who had a heritable interest in the land and that no notice had been served under s 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Munsif found all the questions against the defendants and passed a decree in ejectment. On appeal by the defendants the lower Appellate Court found all the questions except one against the defendants. The point on which the lower Appellate Court disagreed with the Munsif was with regard to the nature of the interest the defendants as under-rayats had in the land in suit. The lower Appellate Court seems to have thought that the under-tenancy might have been a permanent grant or at any rate a grant for an indefinite period and a lease was binding on the plaintiff and so he is not entitled to eject the defendants on service of notice to quit under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The defendants, however, did not produce any lease under which their right is supposed to have been created. It appears that there was a litigation between the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiff and the defendants in the year 1866. The defendants' predecessor sued for possession of the land on the ground that he had been forcibly ousted by his landlord and in support of his case it appears that he produced a lease. That lease, however, has not been produced in this case. It is alleged by the defendants documents have been destroyed by cyclone. But then they did not claim any under-rayati interest under any lease in the present suit. But they claimed that they were occupancy rayats and the lease if produced certainly would not have supported their plea. The Additional District Judge seems to have drawn the conclusion which is not warranted in the absence of any evidence that that lease was a permanent grant. If the defendants claim any permanent right it was for them to substantiate it which they have not done. If the lease was for an indefinite period then under the ruling of the Full Bench in Raj Kumari Debi v. Barkatulla Mandal (1) the plaintiff would be entitled to seek for ejectment on service of notice under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The decision, therefore, of the lower Appellate Court on this point is erroneous.

It was endeavoured on the part of the respondents to support the decree of the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the plaintiff was not the owner of the entire jama. This point was found by both the Courts below in favour of the plaintiff. What happened is this? When the property was sold the sale-certificate was taken in the name of the plaintiff and the pro forma defendant No. 5 and the plaintiff presented a petition in the execution case stating that the pro forma defendant would have a 4 annas share as he had promised to pay 4-annas share of the purchase-money. But the finding is that the pro forma defendant never paid his share of the purchase-money nor entered into possession of the property. Both the Courts below have found that the plaintiff had all along been in possession of the jama purchased and upon that finding it cannot be contended that the plaintiff is not the owner of the entire property.

The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are, therefore, set aside and those of the Munsif restored with costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—This case is really governed by the decision of the House of Lords in British & Beningtons Limited v. N. W. Cachar Tea Co., Ltd. (1). As I understand that case, it lays down that a seller is not to be defeated merely by its being shown that after repudiation by the buyer, he had not the goods to implement the contract actually in his physical possession. He can show that he could supply the goods contracted for either from the open market or from any other source and he would be entitled to maintain a suit for damages for wrongful repudiation.

In this case the contract was that the buyer should take the goods between the 20th and the 30th of April 1919. He did not do so and he set up a false defence that he sent two men to take delivery within the contract period. Those two men were called and gave evidence and the learned Judge refused to believe them. No Judge sitting as a Jury would have believed them because the seller wrote on 28th April 1919 reminding the buyer that the date of effluxion of the contract was drawing near and the buyer (plaintiff) did not answer that until as late as 6th May 1919 when he set up this lying story about the two men having gone for the rice and being sent empty away. Now a point had been taken in this Court by Mr. Patanjali Sastri, which is certainly ingenious, and it is this, that on the evidence before the Court which we have in form of depositions it was never proved by the seller that the goods he had were goods which corresponded to the description of the goods to be sold, it being common knowledge of course that there are different brands and different qualities of rice, and indeed different qualities were mentioned at the trial. Two witnesses were asked whether they knew, what sort of rice it was that the defendant proved to the learned Judge that he had at Ellore, and they spoke of some rice in somebody's godown and of some more that he could have got delivery of against cash from the Bank. Of course the people who were asked those questions replied—there is no doubt that the Vakil knew that they would reply that they did not know. But unfortunately there is not a trace of that suggestion as to the quality not being right having been put to the defendant himself, the seller, who knew all about it. We are not to forget that the buyer's case at the trial was that he was entitled to have damages because he had asked for delivery and had not got it. In my opinion, it would be quite wrong to act on a suggestion of this kind when it is clear that the defendant was never given a fair chance of explaining it at the trial.

The buyer's appeal (A. S. No 195 of 1923) will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

With regard to the seller's appeal (A. S. No. 141 of 1923) he says first that, having got a deposit and there having been a failure by the buyer to take delivery, he ought to keep the deposit. His own original suggestion was that he should return the deposit less whatever he is entitled to by way of damages. I can content myself with saying that it is never the practice in mercantile contracts, to hold that whatever be the damage suffered or not suffered, the seller is to be entitled to keep the deposit. He is only entitled to such damages as the learned Judge sitting as a Jury has suggested, namely, 12 annas, a bag, and I do not think we ought to interfere in a matter which is eminently one for the Trial Judge.

With regard to interest, it sounds plausible to say, as Mr Varadachariar has argued, that a person who is in default cannot possibly be heard to say that he is entitled to claim interest from the other side. The answer to it is the one that the learned Judge has given namely, that the seller should have made calculation of the damage he has actually suffered and tendered the return of the balance to the buyer. No doubt it puts a man in a difficulty and if he goes ultimately into a Court of Law he might have to justify his fixing the figure as best he could. But I take it that almost any tribunal would have an indulgent eye on the arithmetic of a man who adopted that straight-forward course. In the result the seller had the buyer's money in his hands for a good many years to the amount of the excess between what the Judge has allowed by way of damages and the amount of the deposit which was Rs. 4,001. I think here too the judgment of the learned Judge must be upheld and this appeal also will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, 24-Pargannas, dated the 17th July 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court, Alipur, dated the 29th September 1921.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter, and Babu Narendranath Mitter, for the Appellants.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha and M. Nur-uddin Ahmed, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a decree in ejectment. The appeal is valued at Rs. 28 1-0. This valuation is made under the statutory provisions of the Suits Valuation Act and the Court Fees Act and in no way represents the real value of the property. I am told if the defendants succeeded in establishing their claim to a permanent right to the land in suit the value of the property would be no less than Rs. 20,000.

The appellants before me are defendants Nos. 7 and 8 in the suit. The defendant No. 7 through his benamdar and son defendant No. 8 has purchased the tenancy interest of a holding which originally comprised two plots of land. One of these is about 14 cottahs in area situated on the east of Bridge Road Chetla and that is the plot which is the subject of the present suit. The other plot is to the west of the same Road and is about one cottah in area. The plaintiff served notices to quit on defendants Nos. 1 to 7 treating the tenancy as a tenancy-at-will.

The appellants-defendants contested the suit and before me the same contentions were urged as had been urged in the lower Courts. The following were the four points urged: firstly, that there had been no division of the original holding and that this suit being one for ejectment from a portion of the holding would not lie, secondly, that from the facts found by the lower Appellate Court the legal inference should be drawn that the defendants had a permanent tenancy; thirdly, that the defendants and their predecessors had acquired a right of permanent tenancy by prescription; and lastly, that the notice to quit was bad because it related to a portion of the holding and also because it had not been served on the defendant No. 8.

As regards the first point it appears that there was a partition of the estate in 1902 by a decree of the Civil Court. In that suit the 14 cottah plots which the subject of the present suit fell to the share of the plaintiffs and the other one cottah of the holding fell to the share of the co-sharers. Since then it is found that the plaintiffs and their co-sharers were realizing rent separately from the plots allotted to their share. It is contended that this finding is not sufficient to create a division of the holding which would be effective as against the tenants. But the finding of the lower Appellate Court is more than that. He has further found that the situation was accepted by the tenants of the landlords, and if this is correct and the tenants acquiesced in the division of the holding there can be no doubt that the lower Appellate Court was right in deciding that the holding was effectively divided. In my opinion the facts stated are sufficient to support this decision. It is pointed out that when the plaintiffs realized rents from the defendants by certificate procedure, though an objection was taken on behalf of the defendants that there were two plots that objection was not pressed, and no objection was taken that there was no appointment made. It is found further that there is no question here that the Tewaries, that is to say, the appellants' predecessors, were placed in any awkward position. On these facts I hold that the finding of acquiescence by the tenants is justified and there was such a division that the plot of land which formed the subject of the present suit became a separate holding.

As regards the second point the case-law on the subject has been fully dealt with in the recent judgment of Mr. Justice Chakravarti in Abdul Hakim Khan Chaudhuri v. Elahi Baksha Saha (1). At page 62* the elements which were found to have existed in cases where presumption of permanency was made are stated as follows:—First, the origin of the tenancy for residential purposes must be unknown; secondly, the existence of permanent pucca buildings on the land built long before any controversy arises and that to the knowledge of the landlord; thirdly, uniform payment of rent; fourth, recognition of successions and transfer by the landlord. On the findings in the present case it would appear that the second and fourth of these elements may be said to have been established. As regards the third though the payment of rent has not been uniform the increase has been light having regard to the market value of the land. But, in my opinion, this contention must fail on the ground that the appellants have failed to establish the first of the elements that the origin of the tenancy for residential purposes must be unknown. The plaintiffs have proved a kabuliyat of the year 1244 B. S. corresponding to 1837 A. D. The commencement of the kabuliyat which is the important portion is as follows:—“The term of the rented land measuring about 12 cottahs standing in my name situate in Mouzah Chetla Pargana Magura appertain to Kidderpore having expired I, Gopal Tewari again take the aforesaid land on the same rent for a period of one year from Baisakh of the current year up till Chaitra for residential purposes. I shall pay rent at the rate of Rs. 38 sicca Rs 3-11-9 per year according to the following monthly instalments. When the term of this kabuliyat expires and unless and until any second arrangement is made I will pay rent without any objection at the above rate".

(1) 85 Ind. Cas. 103; 52 C. 43; 29 C. W. N. 138; A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 309.

For the appellants it is contended that this kabuliyat is a confirmatory lease recognizing the existing tenancy. Although it would appear from the kabuliyat that the executant had held the land previous to its execution, it also appears that the tenancy by virtue of which he held the land previously had come to an end, since it is stated that the term had expired. A fresh lease executed after the expiration of the term of the previous lease creates a new tenancy and is not a confirmation of the previous tenancy, I would, therefore, hold that the tenancy of the appellants' predecessors commenced with this lease as evidenced by the kabuliyat and was, therefore, known. I would further hold that even if this be not treated as the commencement of a new tenancy it is strong evidence in the plaintiffs' favour to show that the terms on which the land was let to the plaintiffs were not the terms of a permanent lease. Further if I were to hold that this is a case in which I have to consider whether permanent tenancy should have to be inferred from all the facts of the case it would be very hard for the appellants to explain the admission made by defendant No. 8 that what he had purchased was only a monthly thica charatia tenancy-at-will. Holding as I do that the origin of the tenancy is known it follows on the law as laid down in the case as already cited that no presumption of permanency should be made in the appellants' favour in the present case.

I now come to the contention that the appellants' predecessors obtained a mokarrari mourashi right by adverse possession. What is found is that in 1868 they asserted that right and the landlords took no steps to contest that assertion. In my opinion the mere assertion of such right by an admitted tenant would not create any right superior to that of his tenancy even though followed by possession for over 12 years. On behalf of the appellants my attention has been drawn to a decision of the Madras

High Court in Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Mukku Narasaya (2). At page 9* it is stated. "So far as this Presidency is concerned, it would seem to be well settled that a person who has lawfully come into possession as tenant from year to year or a term of years cannot by setting up, however, notoriously, during the continuance of such relation, any title adverse to that of the landlord inconsistent with the legal relation between them, acquire, by limitation, title as owner or any other title inconsistent with that under which he was let into possession". The judgment further points out that this doctrine is consistent with the law in England. It then goes on to say "We do not find the doctrine has been formulated in the other High Courts in India. In fact in Calcutta and Bombay, the view would seem to be that the assertion of the adverse right coupled with possession for the statutory period is enough". In support of this statement two Calcutta cases are cited, but neither of them contain a denial of the principle there stated. The case of Drobo-moyi Gupta v Davis (3) has been summarized and distinguished in an earlier decision of the Madras High Court, Seshamma Shettati v Chockaya Hegade (4). There the tenants who were held entitled to plead the right by prescription became trespassers from the date of the death of the widow and continued to hold the land for statutory period professing to hold the same as permanent tenants under the lease granted by the widow. There is no doubt that a trespasser, whether he is a former tenant whose tenancy has come to an end or whether he is a tenant encroaching as in on other lands of the landlord, can by prescription acquire a tenancy right. But no case of this Court has been shown to me in which it has been held that a tenant from year to year can by setting up a title adverse to that of his landlord acquire a title giving him a better right than that which he has under his contract of tenancy whereas the principle stated as established by the Madras High Court has been followed in Birendra Kishore Manikya v Fuljan Bibi (5). It was there held that while the contract of tenancy is in force either party cannot practically obtain a variation thereof by persisting for a long period in his assertion that the term is otherwise than what it really is. I, therefore, hold that since the defendants' predecessors were in possession as tenants on the terms of the kabuliyat which has been proved in this case the mere assertion by them in 1868 that they had mokarrari mourashi tenancy would not give them any greater right than they held under the lease.

The last point was not seriously pressed. As regards the deficiency of notice in consequence of its relating to a portion only of the holding the argument stood or fell on the success or failure of the argument on the first contention. It was conceded that on the findings that the defendant No. 8 was the benamidar of his father defendant No. 7 it could not be urged that any notice on him was necessary.

For the above reasons I hold that the appeal fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Time allowed for copies in filing an appeal should be calculated from the date of application up to the date when the copies are despatched, and not merely up to the date when they are ready. [p 966, col 2, p. 967, col 1]

There is no authority for the proposition that because once a vakalatnama has not been objected to, it is good for all purposes and that an appeal filed with that defective vakalatnama is properly filed,

Nor does a new power-of-attorney validate an appeal so far as the time for filing an appeal is concerned. But in these matters a Court should not be too meticulous especially when a person on whose behalf the appeal was filed has accepted or ratified the action of the person who filed the appeal on his behalf. Therefore, where a Municipal Committee or its President has endorsed the action of the Secretary in signing the vakalatnama for filing an appeal on behalf of the Municipal Committee, and the opposite party has not objected to the vakalatnama as originally filed in the suit, it should be considered that the Secretary was empowered by the Municipal Committee or its President to instruct the Pleader and had authority to sign the vakalatnama on behalf of Municipal Committee [p. 967, col. 2]

Under the above mentioned circumstances provisions of s 5 of the Limitation Act may also be invoked, if necessary, for extending the time for filing the appeal. [p. 967, col 2, p. 968, col 1]

If a Court does not exercise a discretion which it might have exercised, it is open to the Appellate Court to exercise that discretion. [p. 968, col 1]

In a suit for a declaration that the plaintiffs are owners of a site, which arises in consequence of Municipal Committee's refusal to permit the plaintiffs to build on the site, on the ground that there is a dispute about the ownership of the site between the applicant and the Municipal Committee, it is enough to decide whether plaintiffs are entitled to the property or not and it is not necessary to give a finding as to whether the property belongs to the Committee or not. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 27th March 1925, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Rohtak, dated the 29th August 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.<sup>1</sup>

Lala Jagan Nath Aggarwal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal Mr. Shamair Chand for the appellant has, first of all, contended that the appeal before the learned District Judge was barred by time, because the time to be allowed for copies should be calculated from the date of application up to the date when the copies were ready for delivery and not up to the date when the copies were despatched. There is, however, one ruling of this Court reported as Ghulla Singh v. Sohan Singh (1) which holds the contrary. There are also two

(1) 69 Ind. Cas. 818; 3 L. 280; A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 219; 4 L. L. J. 500.

Division Bench rulings, Gurdit Singh v. Charan Das (2) and Municipal Committee, Chiniot v. Bashi Ram (3) in which it was held that time should be reckoned up to the date of despatch. Therefore, no force in this contention.

The next point argued by Mr. Shamair Chand is that the appeal was not properly presented, because the vakalatnama of the Pleader representing the appeal was signed by the Secretary of the Municipal Committee and the Secretary had no power to institute an appeal. It seems that on the 26th of February 1925 the point was noticed by the learned District Judge and at that time the Pleader for the respondent stated that there was a resolution of the committee authorising the Secretary to file the appeal. The case was adjourned and on the same day Counsel reappeared and stated that there was no such resolution but that there was an endorsement on a paper by the President to the effect that the copy of the judgment may be sent to Lala Nanak Chand to file the appeal etc. The case was again adjourned to the 26th of March 1925, as the Pleader for the respondent asked for time to produce law on the subject. On the 26th of March 1925 a power-of-attorney signed by the President was put in. The learned District Judge held, however, that as the suit had been defended by the Municipal Committee and the vakalatnama in the suit was signed by the Secretary and no objection had been taken to the vakalatnama by the plaintiff and as further a new power-of-attorney signed by the President had been put in, therefore, on the authority of Gopal Singh v. Bhaga (1) and of Khaira v. Nathu (5) the appeal was properly filed. But Mr. Shamair Chand argues that Gopal Singh v. Bhaga (1) is not an authority for the proposition that the vakalatnama not objected to in the suit would be good for purposes of appeal and that Khaira v. Nathu (5) does not apply to the facts of the case, as here there was no question of oversight, though there might have been a mis-apprehension of law. I think that Gopal Singh v. Bhaga (4) does not lay down that once a vakalatnama has not been objected to it is thenceforward good for all purposes and that an appeal filed with that defective vakalatnama is properly filed. Mr. Shamair Chand further contends on the authority of Sri Chandan Bhuiya v. Haroo Sethi (6), a Division Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court, that a new power-of-attorney does not validate an appeal so far as the time for filing an appeal is concerned, in other words, that it has no retrospective effect, and he has also cited Mohammad Ali Khin v. Jasram (7) in support of his contention. Mr. Jagan Nath in reply has relied on Chhaygunnessa Bibi v. Basirar Rahman (8) and on Banwar v. Chettru Lal Rai (9). There is no doubt that Sri Chandan Bhuiya v. Haroo Sethi (6), is the ruling most in point so far as the facts of the case are concerned, but it seems to me that the general principals of the other rulings lay down that in these matters a Court should not be too meticulous, specially when the person, on whose behalf the appeal was filed, has accepted or ratified the action of the person who filed the appeal on his behalf. I think our own Court in Khaira v. Nathu (5) also seems to lean to the view that in these matters the more lenient view should be taken and as the Municipal Committee or its President has undoubtedly endorsed the action of the Secretary and as the plaintiff did not object to the vakalatnama originally filed in the suit, I think it should be held that the Secretary was empowered by the Municipal Committee or by its President to instruct the Pleader and therefore had authority to sign the vakalatnama of the Pleader on behalf of the Municipal Committee. Further, having regard to all the circumstances of the case I should be inclined to extend the time under the provision of s 5 of the Indian Limitation Act if I considered it necessary to do so. No doubt, there was a delay of a month before the vakalatnama signed by the President was put in and this delay has not been successfully explained but in view of the conflict of rulings on the point it is possible that the legal adviser of the Municipal Committee did not consider that it was necessary to have a vakalatnama signed by the President. Mr. Shamair Chand has quite rightly laid stress on this delay and I have been pressed by the argument on this point. However, as I have stated above in all the circumstances of the case I would exercise my discretion in the matter and if necessary extend the time for filing the appeal. It is clear law and not contested before me that if a Court below does not exercise a discretion which it might have exercised, it is open to the Appellate Court to exercise that discretion. This point, therefore, is also repelled.

Lastly, Mr. Shamair Chand has raised a curious contention. He argues that this suit arose because the Municipal Committee refused the plaintiff permission to build on the land under the proviso to s. 193 which empowers a Municipal Committee to refuse permission to build on the ground that there is a dispute about the ownership of the site between the applicant and the Municipal Committee. Mr. Shamair Chand contends that, therefore, it is necessary in a case of this kind to decide not only whether the plaintiff is entitled to the property but also to decide whether the Municipal Committee is entitled to the property because in either event a decision by the Court would put an end to the dispute between the applicant and the Municipal Committee and then the terms of the proviso to s. 193 would not empower the Municipal Committee to refuse permission to build. I am, however, of opinion that the Legislature did not mean to confer any such right on an applicant to put a Municipal Committee to proof of its title to land in dispute. On the contrary, by not directing that a suit should be brought by an applicant when permission was refused by the Municipal Committee on this ground it by implication left the parties to their ordinary remedies at law. The plaintiff, therefore, could only ask for a declaration that the site was his. He could not ask for a declaration that the site was not the Municipal Committee's. Further, this point was not put into issue and does not seem to have been argued in this light before the learned District Judge or before the Trial Court. Mr. Shamair Chand relies on the words of the plaint which do state that the site does not belong to the Municipal Committee as well as assert that it belongs to the plaintiff, but having regard to the course of the suit I think that this was nothing more than the usual tautology of the plaint, and I do not think that the point should be allowed to be raised for the first time in second appeal, especially as it would necessitate a remand to enable the Municipal Committee to prove its title.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal but in the

RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss 30, 65—Chit fund transaction, whether lottery—Suit by non-prize-winner against stakeholder for return of subscription, whether maintainable—Contract, whether void from inception

A chit fund consisted of 500 subscribers, each subscribing Rs 2 per mensem. At the end of each month a chit was drawn by lot and the winner was paid Rs 100. Thereafter his connection with the chit fund ceased altogether and he was not under any obligation to continue his subscriptions. According to the rules of the fund, the drawing would thus go on for 50 months when the chit fund would be wound up, the stakeholder paying back to the remaining subscribers the total amount subscribed by each of them. In a suit by a non-prize-winner after subscribing for 48 instalments for return of amount of subscription with interest

Held, that the chit fund transaction was a lottery and the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the amount either by virtue of the contract or by reason of any obligation under s 65 of the Contract Act as if the contract had become void [p 969, col 2, p 973, col. 1]

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise a decree of the Court of the District Mursif, Melur, dated the 12th March 1923, in S. C. S. No. 1281 of 1922.

Mr. A. N. Krishna Aiyangar, for the Petitioner,

Mr. K. V. Srinirasa Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—Two questions have been argued in this civil revision petition. The first is whether the chit transaction, in which the petitioner was the promoter and the respondent was a subscriber, partook of the character of a lottery or consisted of wagering agreements between the subscribers and the promoter. The second is whether the respondent is entitled to recover the money which he subscribed either upon the terms of the contract between him and the petitioner, or by reason of the obligation cast by s. 65, Indian Contract Act, upon the persons who have received any advantage, of restoring it upon an agreement or contract becoming void or being discovered to be void.

The mere fact that the order in which members of a Mutual Benefit Society take their benefits is determined by the drawing of lots does not constitute the transaction a lottery [Vide Wallingford v. Mutual Society (1)]

In the particular form of chit transaction that is before us, 500 persons undertook each to subscribe two rupees at each instalment and there were to be 50 drawings at each of which the winner was to get Rs 100 and walk out without any liability to subscribe for any subsequent instalments. In other words the promoter laid odds of 98 to 2 at the first drawing against any particular subscriber drawing the winning ticket. At the second drawing he laid odds of 96 to 4 with each of the remaining 499 subscribers, and so on till 50 drawings had taken place and 50 subscribers had drawn the prize of Rs 100.

The promoter was secure against loss as he got two rupees from each of the 500 subscribers for the first instalment and he paid out only Rs. 100 to the winner. After the 50th drawing those who had not drawn a prize were entitled to get their money back without interest. The promoter was able to pay the prizes to those who drew the winning numbers out of the subscriptions paid into his hands by the others, and he recouped himself from loss at the end by putting the money left in his hands from each instalment of subscriptions out to usury and pocketing the interest. The chance of getting a prize of Rs. 100 for a payment of two rupees at the first drawing, four rupees at the second and six rupees at the third and so on, free from any further liability to the winner, was the bait for attracting investors. The adventitious character of the gains also had the effect of making the whole transaction a lottery and the agreements between the promoter and the subscribers wagering agreements within the meaning of s 30, Contract Act. All who took part in what the law regards as an unlawful transaction were in pari delicto and no participator in it can invoke the help of the law for enforcing his claims to recover any money entrusted to any person to abide the result of the drawings, even though the return of sums subscribed by those who were not lucky enough to draw winning tickets was one of the conditions of the transaction. I agree with the opinion of Odgers, J., in Nagappa Pillai v. Arunachalam Chetty (2) that the agreement to re-pay the subscriptions in a case like this is not severable from the prize arrangement. Neither can a subscriber invoke s. 65 of the Contract Act, for the agreement in this case did not become void nor was it discovered to be void but it was void for illegality from its inception (see Indian Contract and Specific Relief Acts by Pollock and Mulla, 11th Edition, pages 365—368) and the object of the subscription, which was the formation of an association for conducting 'an unlawful system of lottery has been accomplished. When money has been paid under an illegal contract which has been partially carried into effect, it cannot be recovered back [Vide Kearley v. Thomson (3)]

The respondent's Vakil relied upon Shanmuga Mudaliar v. Kumaraswami Mudali (4), which, with due respect, I feel difficulty in regarding as a decision based on sound principles. That case and the one before us possess the common feature that the prize winners in the first 50 drawings were not bound to subscribe to instalments after they had won a prize. The significance of this feature in a chit transaction, which makes it a gamble, has been missed by the learned Judges. In In re Doraisami Mudaly (5) there was a similar feature in a chit transaction and it was observed by Collins, C. J., and Shephard, J.:

"This is clearly a lottery, for it depends entirely on the drawing of lots whether or not the prize of Rs. 100 falls to any given subscriber. As the prize winner thereafter ceases to be a subscriber to the fund, it must necessarily follow that the rest out of whose subscriptions the prize has been paid and also continue to be subscribers, are the losers."

In Shanmugna Mudali v. Kumaraswami Mudali (4) Venkatasubba Rao, J., expresses an opinion that the fact that the money for the prizes really comes out of the interest on the capital fund contributed differentiates this case from other cases of lotteries. He says at page 109*.

"What the 449 members lose is the interest upon their money and what the first 49 members gain is a portion of the interest thus lost by the other subscribers."

But in Richards v. Starck (6) it was held that the loss of interest upon a subscriber's subscription was a sufficient loss to make a contract resting on a future event of an uncertain nature a gaming or wagering contract. In the present chit transaction, out of 500 subscribers there were 450 losers of interest on their money deposited with the promoter. The remaining 50 made a gain, the amount of which varied according to an order determined by the drawing of lots which thus depended not on skill but on pure chance.

It is true, as Ramesam, J., observes, that the Criminal Law by s. 291A, Indian Penal Code, only makes punishable the keeping of an office for holding a lottery and the publication of proposals for drawing a lottery. The Civil Law, however, goes further and prevents obligations arising out of lotteries being enforced in a Court of Law, whether the lottery is held in an office to which the public have access or in a private place to which admission is not to be had for the mere asking. The learned Judges were evidently much influenced in their decision by the case of Wallingford v. Mutual Society (1). That was a case of legitimate business free from speculation in which there were no losers and no one gained an unearned sum of money by the chance of drawing lots. The same may be said of the kuri chit dealt with in Vasudevan Nambudri v. Mammod (7).

The civil revision petition is allowed with costs and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed.

Plaintiff and defendant will each bear their own costs in the trial of the small cause suit in the District Munsif's Court.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I have had the advantage of reading my learned brother's judgment with which I agree. The suit which has given rise to this civil revision petition was instituted by the respondent for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 119-13-5, being the principal and interest due to him on account of the 48 instalments of subscriptions paid by him to a chit fund conducted by the petitioner. The chit fund consisted of 500 subscribers, each subscribing Rs. 2 per mensem. At the end of each month a chit was drawn by lot and the winner was paid Rs. 100. Thereafter his connection with the chit fund ceased altogether and he was not under any obligation to continue his subscriptions. According to the rules of the fund, the drawings would thus go on for 50 months when the chit fund would be wound up, the stakeholder paying back to the remaining subscribers the total amount subscribed by each of them. The respondent, non-prize-winner, after subscribing for instalments asked the petitioner, the stakeholder, to return to him with interest the money he has subscribed. The petitioner refusing to refund the amount contended that the chit fund was a lottery and that a suit was not maintainable to recover the amount. The learned District Munsif holding that the chit in question is not a lottery so far as non-prize-winners like the plaintiff are concerned, gave him a decree for the amount claimed.

It is argued for the petitioner that the transaction set forth above constitutes "agreements by way of wager" between the stakeholder and the subscriber and as such is void both on principle and on the authority of the decisions of this Court and that, therefore, the decree of the lower Court should be set aside. In Sunkunni v. Ikkora Kutti (8), it was held by Phillips, J., that a "kuri" conducted on similar lines is a lottery and that the plaintiff's suit to recover the money paid is not maintainable. This decision was followed by Krishnan and Odgers, JJ., in

Nagappa Pillai v. Arunachalem Chetty (2), though the learned Judges differed on the question whether it was possible to hold that the agreement to re-pay the subscriptions at the end of the period was severable from the arrangement to give the prize. In Shanmuga Mudaliar v. Kumaraswami Mudali (4) Ramesam and Venkatasubba Rao, J.J., did not follow these decisions, their opinion being mainly influenced by a decision of the House of Lords in Wallingford v. Mutual Society (1). It may be stated that the chit fund in all those cases was conducted in the same manner as in the present case, the successful drawer of the ticket having nothing to do with the chit fund after drawing his prize.

In the light of these decisions and of what is meant by an "agreement by way of wager", we have to determine whether the present case has been rightly decided by the learned District Munsif.

The Indian Contract Act does not contain any definition of a "wagering contract". Section 30 states that agreements by way of wager are void. In Thacker v. Hardy (9), Cotton, L. J., said.—

"The essence of gaming and wagering is that one party is to win and the other to lose upon a future event which at the time of the contract is of an uncertain nature, that is to say, if the event turns one way A will lose, but if it turns out the other way he will win."

In Subramanian Pattar v. Kiradadasan (10) it was pointed out that in a chit fund transaction the contracting parties are the stakeholder on the one side and each of the subscribers on the other side, and there are as many separate contracts as there are subscribers. On analysis it will be found that the contract of the stakeholder with the subscribers in the present case partakes of the nature of a wagering contract. As pointed out in my learned brother's judgment—

"The promoter laid odds of 98 to 2 at the first drawing against any particular subscriber drawing the winning ticket. At the second drawing he laid odds of 96 to 4 with each of the remaining 499 subscribers, and so on till 50 drawings had taken place and 50 subscribers had drawn the prize of Rs 100."

This shows that the arrangement is really a bet between the subscribers and the stakeholder as to how a future event of an uncertain nature, i. e. the drawing of a winning ticket will eventually turn out. If a subscriber happened to draw one of the "winning tickets", i. e., if the uncertain event turned one way, obviously he would gain an increased amount of money; would he lose, if the event turned out the other way?

Since according to the rules, the non-prize-winners get back their subscription amount, it is argued that the present case falls within the principle of the decisions in Iyyanan Kone v. Vidoomada Kone, S. A. No. 169 of 1857, Kamakshi Achari v. Apparv Pillai (11) and Vasudevan Nambudri v. Mammod (7), wherein it was held that, in chit fund transactions to which subscribers contribute monthly subscriptions, each subscriber in his turn as determined by lot taking the entire subscription for one month, there was no element of chance or risk, the money paid by each subscriber being eventually returned to him. In Kamakshi Achari v. Apparv Pillai (11), such a transaction was thus characterised by the learned Judges

"It is not the case of a few out of a number of subscribers obtaining prizes by lot. By the arrangement all get a return of the amount of their contributions. It is simply a loan of the common fund to each subscriber in turn, and neither the right of the subscribers to the return of their contributions, nor to a loan of the fund is made a matter of risk or speculation. No loss appears to be necessarily hazarded, nor any gain made a matter of chance."

I do not think the same can be said of the transaction in the present case. I have already shown how the subscriber's gain is made a matter of chance. As regards the loss, the plaintiff, no doubt, gets back the entire capital which he has subscribed. In one sense, therefore, it is true that the transaction involves no loss in any event to the plaintiff as he is to have his money returned to him but he loses his interest. In England it has been pointed out in two cases of wagering contracts, similar in this respect (viz., loss of interest) to the present case, that this loss "of interest" is sufficiently a loss to bring the contract within the spirit, though not perhaps within the actual wording, of the definition" of a wagering contract [see Richards v. Starck (6)]. In In re, Doraisami Mudali (5) in which also as in the case before us, the prize-winner after securing the prize ceased to be a subscriber, the fund closing after a stated period with a refund of their subscriptions to the unsuccessful members, it was held by Collins, C. J., and Shephard, J., that the transaction is clearly a lottery, "for it depends entirely on the drawing of lots whether or not the prize of Rs. 100 falls to any given subscriber." The learned Judges state :—

"As the prize winner thereafter ceases to be a subscriber to the fund, it must necessarily follow that the rest out of whose subscription the prize has been paid and also continue to be subscribers, are the losers. The case, therefore, is quite different from that in Kamakshi Achari v. Appavu Pillai (11)."

These decisions were not brought to the notice of the learned Judges in Shanmuga Mudali v. Kumaraswami Mudali (4).

In my view, the agreement in this case shows that the plaintiff gave his subscriptions to the defendant upon the terms that, in an uncertain future event, he was to recover, if that event went one way, the sum subscribed with considerable increment; and, in the other event, he was to recover the total amount subscribed by him but without interest. This means that the transaction is, in substance, a wagering contract, which may be described, in the language of Channell, J., in Richards v. Starck (6) "as a bet on terms very favourable to the plaintiff."

For the above reasons I am of opinion that the decision in Iyyanur Kone v. Vidoo-mada Kone, S. A. No. 169 of 1857 Kamakshi Achari v. Appavu Pillai (11) and Vasudevan Nambudri v. Mammod (7) are clearly distinguishable and that the chit fund transaction in this case is an agreement by way of wager and is, therefore, void.

In the decision in Shanmuga Mudali v. Kumaraswami Mudali (4) strongly relied on by the respondent the learned Judge, Venkatasubba Rao, J., states : "There is some element of chance in regard to the first 49 subscribers ;... but the dominant feature of the transaction is that it enables a large number to gradually lay by money and receive their savings in a lump sum and the scheme is in their case an incentive to thrift." With due respect to the learned Judge, I am inclined to think that it cannot be said that the primary object of a person in taking a chit in a fund like the present one is to lay by money, for receiving it back in a lump sum. The chance of winning a prize of Rs. 100 on payment of a subscription of Rs. 2 at the first drawing, Rs. 4 at the second drawing and so on during the fifty drawings is the attraction which tempts the subscribers to join in such a chit fund.

In arriving at their conclusion the learned Judges in Shanmuga Mudali v. Kumaraswami Mudali (4) were mainly influenced by the decision of the House of Lords in Wallingford v. Mutual Society (1). In that case a society called the "Mutual Society" was registered under the Companies Act. Its declared object was to accumulate capital by means of monthly subscriptions from members, to advance such capital to the members on rotation, to secure payment of such advances by taking and holding real or other securities and ultimately to divide among the members all the profits that had been made. The whole mode of operation of the Society appeared to be this ; To obtain subscriptions from members to advance them money on interest upon "certificates of appropriation." By Art. 27 it was declared that "appropriations shall be allotted in two ways, the first and every fourth one thereafter, by drawing, free of any premium or interest, while those intermediate shall be allotted to the member or members tendering the highest premium for the same respectively." All appropriations were to be re-paid by equal quarterly payments extending over twenty years from the advance. It was held that, though the benefits of the society were made available to the members by a process of periodical drawings, the society did not come within the mischief of the Lottery Acts and that the transaction it carried on was not a gambling transaction. The facts of the case show that amongst the subscribers, there were no losers and no one derived any undue gain by the chance of drawing lots. As pointed out in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XV. page 301 : "Where the scheme has for its object the carrying on of a legitimate business the fact that it provides for the distribution of its profits, in certain events, by lot will not vitiate the scheme." The case resembles the decisions in Kamakshi Achari v. Appavu Pillai (11) and Vasudevan Nambudri v. Mammad (7) already referred to and on principle is clearly distinguishable from the present case. It may be mentioned that Ramesam, J., deals with the case in Shanmuga Mudali v. Kumaraswami Mudali (4) as a suit to enforce the terms of a contract collateral to another transaction which can be enforced, even when the main transaction is void on account of being a wagering contract, unless it amounts to an offence punishable by law, though in the course of the judgment, the learned Judge agrees with Venkatasubba Rao, J., that the main contract itself is not void.

The respondent argues that, if the transaction is an agreement by way of wager and is invalid on that account, he is still entitled to get a refund of the amount claimed by him either under s. 65 of the Indian Contract Act, or on the ground that the agreement to return the amount is severable, from the arrangement to give the prize. I entirely agree with the opinion of Odgers, J., in Nagappa Pillai v. Arunachalam Chetty (2) for the reasons given by him in that judgment that the claim of the respondent in this case cannot be substantiated on either of the above grounds.

In the result I must hold that the decision of the learned District Munsif is wrong, and this civil revision petition must be allowed with costs as ordered by my learned brother.

JUDGMENT.

C M A. No 269 OF 1919.

The plaintiff, acting Secretary of Sri Kannika Parameswari Viswan Setti Venkataratnam Hindu High School Committee sues for the recovery of Rs. 4,278 5-9 from the defendants who are the sons of one Venkayya Garu. The plaint allegation is that Venkayya managed the affairs of the High School and was in possession of considerable funds and that he rendered an account to the Committee of the school and that on going through the account, it was found that the account rendered by him was incorrect and that a sum of Rs. 4,000 and odd was with him and that the defendants who are his heirs are bound to pay the amount to the plaintiff. The defendants raised various contentions and the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the plaintiff had no cause of action against the defendants. On appeal the District Judge of Masulipatam reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and remanded the suit to the lower Court for taking accounts. Against the decree of the District Judge the defendants have preferred this appeal.

The point for determination in this appeal is whether the plaintiff has a cause of action against the defendants. The Hindu High School at Bezwada was managed by a Committee called Sri Kannika Parameswari Hindu High School Committee till November 1915. The Committee was registered under the Societies Registration Act of 1860. Owing to lack of funds or other reasons, the Committee transferred the institution and its properties to Sri Kannika Parameswari Visvam Chetti Venkataratnam Hindu High School Committee which was also registered under the Societies Registration Act of 1860. This transfer is evidenced by Ex. F, dated 18th November 1915. The contention of the appellants is that when the first Committee transferred all its rights to the second Committee, it did not transfer any outstanding belonging to the first Committee and, therefore, the plaintiff who is the Secretary of the second Committee is not entitled to sue the defendants for any sum of money that might be found due to the first Committee. From the terms of F, it is clear that the first Committee transferred all its assets and liabilities in connection with the Hindu High School at Bezwada to the second Committee. In para. 2 the recital is:—"Whereas the members of your Committee applied on 5th September 1915 praying that the management of Sri Kannika Parameswari Hindu High School at Bezwada and the entire properties thereof be transferred to your Committee on condition of your Committee discharging the debts due by the said High School Committee and in pursuance of the terms of the memorandum thereto attached, we have agreed thereto and the members of our General Committee have passed a resolution No. 8 on 19th September 1915 to the effect that our General Committee should be dissolved, that the management of the school as well as the properties should be transferred to your Committee subject to the terms of the said memorandum" etc., and in the operative portion of the deed there is this clause:—"Therefore in accordance with the said resolution we have hereby transferred to you the management of the school and delivered possession to you of the immoveable properties belonging to the said school worth about Rs. 30,000 and specified in schedules of moveable and immoveable properties."

The appellant wants to rely upon the fact that in the schedule of assets this debt due from Venkayya is not mentioned; but from the tenor of the document and from the recitals therein it is quite clear that the entire properties of the school were transferred to the second Committee. As the learned Judge remarks though there is no list of debts in the schedule to Ex. F, the debts of the old Committee incurred in connection with the school were discharged by the second Committee. One of the recitals is.—

"With this sum and with the sums which might be received hereafter the debts of the school should be discharged."

The second Committee did undertake to discharge the debts of the first Committee, and though no list of debts was attached to Ex. F, the second Committee was bound to pay all the debts of the first Committee. It is not necessary that when one Committee transfers all its assets to another Committee there should be a list in order to pass the title of the first Committee to the second Committee with regard to the outstandings. In this case the second Committee took over all that the first Committee possessed on behalf of the Hindu High School, Bezwada. The right of the first Committee to sue for and recover any amount due to that Committee did pass to the second Committee and the plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to bring a suit.

The next contention of the appellants is that the First Committee had only a right to sue Venkayya and a mere right to sue cannot be transferred by reasons of the provisions of s. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act. The mere right to sue cannot be transferred. Here what was transferred was not a mere right to sue but the debt that was due by Venkayya to the first Committee and, therefore, the transfer does not offend against the provisions of s. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act. The plaint as laid contains an averment that Venkayya was indebted to the first Committee in the sum of Rs. 3,145 13-8. Venkayya was in possession of the funds belonging to the Hindu High School. He rendered an account which was afterwards found to be false and according to the plaintiff's case Venkayya was in possession of the funds of the Committee and, therefore, he was bound to pay that amount to that Committee, and the second Committee having taken over the management with the rights and liabilities of the first Committee is entitled to sue for and recover the amount due to the first Committee. The cases relied upon by the appellant Prohlad Chandra Das v. Biswa Nath Bera (1) and Pansulari Venkatasawmi v. Mentana Ramachandra Raju (2) have no application to the present case. In Prohlad Chandra Das v. Biswa Nath Bera (1) it was held that a right to take accounts and to recover such sums as may be found due is not assignable being a mere right to sue within the meaning of s. 6, cl. (e) of the Transfer of Property Act. On the construction of the document and from the way in which the suit was framed it was found that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain a suit as he had purchased a mere right to sue for account. In Pansulari Venkatasawmi v. Mentana Ramachandra Raju (2), it was held that a mere right to recover damages for the negligence of an agent in failing to collect rents cannot be transferred. The mere right to sue for damages is not assignable. In the Pansulari Venkatasawmi v. Mentana Ramachandra Raju (2) the cause of action was the negligence of the agent. If it was shown that the agent did collect a certain sum of money on behalf of the principal, the agent was accountable for the amount actually received by him; and for what he had with him, he was in the position of a debtor for he had the money of the principal in his hands. The assignment of the amount in the hands of the agent would not offend against s. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act [vide Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (3)]. In Prosser v. Ed- monds (4) the Lord Chief Baron held that a naked right to sue was not assignable. In Hill v. Boyle (5) it was held that a mere right to sue a trustee for interest and profits of a trust fund in his hands was not transferable.

The observations of Parker, J., in Glegg v. Bromley (6), are applicable to the present case. At page 496*, the learned Judge observes: "it is to be observed that an equitable assignee of a chose in action, whether it is legal or equitable, could institute proceedings and maintain proceedings for its recovery. The question was whether the subject-matter of the assignment was, in the view of the Court, property with an incidental remedy for its recovery, or was a bare right to bring an action either at law or in equity. With regard to the assignments of future property, they stand, I think, on a totally different footing. Nothing passes, even in equity, until the property comes into present existence. Only when this happens can the assignment attach and an interest pass."

This observation is quoted with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Subhadrayamma v. Venkatapati (7). In that case the plaintiff's husband advanced certain sums of money for litigation to the defendant in the express agreement that the money borrowed from the plaintiff should have a charge upon the moveable and immoveable properties obtained by means of litigation. Owing to disputes between the plaintiff and the defendant, the plaintiff refused to advance any further monies. After a time the suit was compromised and the lender's widow claimed that the advance and the interest thereon were a charge on the money paid under the compromise. The Privy Council held that the plaintiff was entitled to a charge on the amount obtained on compromise in the suit. Their Lordships held that the agreement was an assignment of part of the fruits of the litigation, and even if they were to be regarded as non existing property at the date of the agreement, the agreement attached upon the money being paid. The principle is that if a certain sum of money is due from any person that sum is recoverable on assignment; and if it is to be ascertained only on taking accounts it might be that the right to take the account is not assignable: but where the allegation is that the defendant is in possession of funds belonging to a person or that the defendant is accountable for a definite sum of money to a person such a claim is transferable. In such a case, the right to recover the money is not a mere right to sue and the transfer of such a right does not offend against s. 6 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act. In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs.

C. M. A. No 256 of 1919.

In view of our judgment in C. M. A. No. 269 of 1919 the appellant does not press this appeal; it is dismissed with costs.

Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Kuppaswamy Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this second appeal is whether the real owner of a ryotwari holding can sue in a Civil Court for a declaration that certain lands belong to him and that a sale under the provisions of the Estates Land Act was "fraudulent, illegal, invalid and not binding, on him". Plaintiff who is the appellant in second appeal alleging that he was the real owner of the lands, and that the registered holder Rangaswami Naidu was only a benamidar sued to have a rent sale held at the instance of the first defendant, at which the second defendant became the purchaser, set aside on various grounds. The District Munsif found as a fact (1) that the notice Ex. X did not specify the holding in respect of which the arrear was due; and (2) that a large number of fields and a larger extent than necessary were sold in contravention of the provisions of s. 126 of the Estates Land Act. On these findings he held that the sale was invalid and gave the declaration asked for. The second defendant appealed and the Appellate Court allowed the appeal on two grounds:—(1) plaintiff, not being the ryot who was liable to pay rent on the holding, could not maintain the suit, and (2) no suit as contemplated by s. 112 of the Estates Land Act having been filed, the validity of the sale cannot be disputed.

Both the Courts have found that plaintiff had failed to get his name registered as a pattadar, and this finding has to be accepted. But the question is whether the circumstance prevents him from impeaching the sale in a Civil Court. That such a suit will lie in a Civil Court at the instance of a ryot (pattadar) has been held by a Full Bench of this Court in Raja of Ramnad v. Venkatarama Iyer (1). No case has been referred to in which it has been held that such a suit will not lie at the instance of a person who claims to be the real owner of a ryotwari holding. I am of opinion that such a suit is equally open to him.

The contention that s. 189 of the Estates Land Act barred the suit, is sought to be supported by the ruling in Irulappan

(1) 69 Ind. Cas 923, 45 M. 890; 16 L. W. 274; (1922) M. W. N. 501, 31 M. L. T. 158; 43 M. L. J. 264; A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 6 (F. B.).

Servai v. Veerappan (2). In that case it is stated at page 115* that "to allow a person who has not taken action under s. 146, to ignore a rent sale at the time it is held and subsequently to dispute its validity in a civil suit would run counter to both these principles. Section 189 does not seem to me to allow of such a construction." If a ryot who has not instituted proceedings under s. 112, can come in with a suit in a Civil Court, as has been held in the Full Bench case above referred to, it is difficult to see why a person in the position of plaintiff cannot be allowed to do so. The case in Irulappan Servai v. Veerappan (2) does not appear to have been brought to the notice of the learned Judges who decided the Full Bench case; but nevertheless it appears to me that the ground on which the decision proceeded is no longer tenable, having regard to the Full Bench ruling.

I would, therefore, allow the second appeal and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for decision upon the other issues raised in the case. Appellant will get a refund of the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal. Appellant will have the costs of the second appeal and the other costs will abide and follow the result.

A debt incurred by a father in the course of a hardware trade carried on by him, is a commercial debt and under the Hindu Law the son is under a pious obligation to discharge the same. [p 978, col 1]

Per Coutts Trotter, C. J.—The text of Gautama which describes a commercial debt as vyavaharika must now be held to have been declared as obsolete [ibid.]

The particular instances of vyavaharika debts given in the Smritis must be treated as a mere expression of opinion on the part of the authors as to what classes of debts would fall under the general words. A modern Court is, therefore, free in interpreting the general term "vyavaharika" to consider the particular instances given as obsolete under the conditions of the present day [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—In this case the father of the appellants embarked on the hardware trade in 1914 and was sued with them in respect of debts contracted by him in the conduct of that venture. The appellants' Vakil relied on a text of Gautama XII, 41 which runs as follows.—

"Money due by a surety for a commercial debt, a fee due to the parents of a bride, debts contracted for spirituous liquor or in gambling and a fine shall not involve the sons of the debtor" and the bold contention is put forward that the pious obligation does not extend, therefore, to commercial debts. I have discussed this subject at length in para. 303 of the 9th Edition of Mayne on Hindu Law and I have very little to add to what I said there. This Court has held in Thangathamma v. Arunachalam Chettiar (1) that sons are liable in a case of a surety bond executed by the father for payment as distinct from obligations as a surety for appearance and for honesty and there are other decisions of the Calcutta and Patna Courts to the same effect. This appears to me to be based upon the view that the governing provision in the texts is that which excludes from the rule debts that are not vyavaharika, an expression taken from Usanas (apud Mitakshara II, 48) and Vyasa (apud Jagannatha I, V, 203).

(1) 48 Ind. Cas. 76; 41 M. 1071; 35 M. L. 229; (1918) M. W. N. 673.

From 1874 onwards the decisions of the Privy Council have adopted this view and have crystallised the translation as "illegal or immoral". It appears in Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (2) and has been repeated in many subsequent cases. If this be correct, it will follow as I have said that the particular instances given in the Smirities must be treated as a mere expression of opinion on the part of the authors as to what classes of debts would fall under the general words. A modern Court would, therefore, be free in interpreting the general term to consider the particular instances given as obsolete under the conditions of to-day. I am clearly of opinion that commercial debts fall into this category and that we ought to say that the pious obligation extends to them. It may well be that in the time of Gautama, it was thought that to engage in trade was degrading, at any rate in the case of the higher castes. No one could pretend that that view would be entertained to-day. For these reasons I am of opinion that the sons are liable in this case and that the appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Of course the whole doctrine of the pious obligation is itself a relic of antiquity based originally on a religious and not a legal conception but it has been controlled and moulded into shape by a series of decisions which, in my opinion, make it a working rule which in its actual application is neither inconvenient nor unjust.

Viswanatha Sastri, J.—Appeal by defendants Nos. 3 to 5 against the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Rajamundry, in O. S. No. 25 of 1920.

Appellants are the sons of the first defendant, and the second defendant is their maternal uncle. The suit was laid for the recovery of a sum of money (Rs. 6,898-11-6) due in respect of money dealings between defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and plaintiff. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are said to have carried on in partnership a trade in hardware, for the purpose of which trade money was being borrowed from time to time from plaintiff. It was also alleged that the first defendant and defendants Nos. 3 to 5 were undivided, and that the trade was being carried on by the first defendant for the benefit of the family. Defendants Nos. 3 to 5 contended that as they have become divided from their father (1st defendant) they had nothing to do with the trade; that the trade was never an ancestral trade nor a joint family trade; and that they were not liable. They also contended that the settlements of account alleged in the plaint, between plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, were false. The Subordinate Judge held that the settlements of account were true, that the partition set up was brought about to defraud creditors; and he passed a decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and against the joint family properties in the hands of defendants Nos. 3 to 5.

The contentions urged in appeal are :— (1) that the trade not being an ancestral trade, and the first defendant having started it only in 1914, appellants could not be held liable for sums said to have been borrowed for the purposes of the trade; (2) that as Rs. 1,926-6-3 and Rs. 695-3-0 were due from third persons, and as the partnership took them over, they (defendants Nos. 3 to 5) were in any event not liable for the sums. The contention that defendants Nos. 3 to 5 had separated themselves from their father was not pressed before us.

Taking the second contention first, the allegation in para. 6 of the plaint is that on January 5, 1918 defendants Nos. 1 and 2 "made themselves liable in the sum of Rs. 1,926-6-3 for the share of E. Venkata-subbarayudu in the katha debt due by him and another K. Venkatanarayana Row; and the pre-note debt of the said E. Venkata-subbarayudu in the sum of Rs. 695-3-0". In the case of a suretyship for payment, it may be taken as well settled that a Hindu son is liable: See Sitaramayya v. Venkataramanna (3), Thangathamma v. Arunachallam Chettiar (1), Tukarambhat v. Gangasam Mulchand Gujar (4) and Rasik Lal Mandal v. Singhaswa Roy (5). The decision in Narayan v. Venkatacharya (6) relates to the liability of a guardian and has no application to the case before us. The test of Gautama (s. 41) was referred to by the Vakil for the appellants, but it appears to me that Gautama simply repeats Manu (s. 159) and that he refers only to a suretyship for appearance. In the case of a suretyship for payment, the text of Yajnavalkya recognises the liability of a son. This contention, therefore, cannot prevail.

Coming to the first contention it was urged that the father was not continuing any ancestral trade but was starting a new trade, and that for debts contracted for a new trade, the sons were not liable. That under ancient texts a son was under a legal obligation to pay his father's debts was the opinion held by that eminent Judge (Muthusami Iyer, J) in Ponnappa Pillai v. Pappuvaiyanga (7). According to Yajnavalkya if a father be long absent in a distant country or be dead the debt must be repaid by the son. It is equally well settled that the son was not under any such liability in the case of debts contracted for illegal or immoral purposes. According to Yajnavalkya a son was not bound to pay a debt, even though hereditary if it was contracted for the purpose of drinking, debauchery or gambling. According to Gautama a son was not bound to discharge a debt incurred by his deceased father if due by him to a wine shop or a gambling saloon. "By the Hindu Law, the freedom of the son from the obligation to discharge the father's debt has respect to the nature of the debt". See Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Boboore Munraj Koonweree (8). In Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (9) their Lordships of the Privy Council refer in the appeal the following dictum of Westropp, C. J., in the case of Udaram Sitaram v. Kanu Panduji (10) "subject to certain limited exceptions (as for instance, debts contracted for immoral or illegal purposes) the whole of the family undivided estate would be, when in the hands of the sons or grandsons, liable to the debts of the father or grandfather".

In the case before us the trade the father carried on was a trade in hardware, and there was nothing illegal or immoral about it. There is not even any suggestion to this effect in the written statement; and all that is alleged is that the business was neither an ancestral nor family business, that the sons had become divided from their father; and that the business was carried on by the father for his sole benefit. The finding is that the business was carried on for the benefit of the family and that the partition was fraudulent. In Ramkrishna Trimbak v. Narayan Shivorao Aras (11) it was held that a son cannot escape liability for payment of the debts of his father contracted in fish trade. The decision in Official Assignee of Madras v. Palaniappa Chetty (12) is no authority for the proposition that where a Hindu father starts for the first time a new trade, and for the purpose of the trade contracts debts, his sons cannot be held liable for the debts so contracted. In that case the question arose in bankruptcy proceedings whether a Hindu son can be adjudicated insolvent in respect of debts incurred in a business newly started by his father during his minority, and in which he actively participated after attaining majority, and there was no question as to the liability of joint family properties, for such debts.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

IN A. S. No. 362 of 1923.

Appeal by defendants. Nos 2 to 4 against the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry, in O. S. No 24 of 1923.

Appellants are the sons of the first defendant and the suit was laid for the recovery of a sum of money (Rs. 3,050) due in respect of money dealings carried on between plaintiff and first defendant. It was alleged that the dealings were for the purpose of financing a trade in hardware which first defendant was carrying on for the benefit of the undivided family consisting of himself and his sons. Appellants contended that they had become divided from their father, that the trade was not an ancestral trade and that it was never carried on for their benefit. The Subordinate Judge held that the dealings were proved that the partition was brought about to defraud creditors; and that the joint family properties were liable.

The contention urged in appeal is that the trade not being an ancestral trade and the first defendant having started it only in 1914, appellants could not be held liable for sums said to have been borrowed for purposes of the trade. The contention that they had separated from their father was not pressed before us.

This appeal was heard with Appeal 436 of 1922, and for reasons given in my judgment.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 26th January 1925, affirming that of the Assistant Collector, Kasur, District Lahore, dated the 24th March 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Ganga Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in suit belonged to Gurdit Singh, who mortgaged it to Nihal Singh. After Gurdit Singh's death one of his four sons, Baghel Singh, sold his one-fourth share to Musa, and the remaining three sold three-fourths to Narain Das defendant No. 1. The latter redeemed the whole land from the mortgagee in 1900. In 1923 Musa's son Siraj-ud-din applied for partition of his share. His title being disputed by Narain Das he was referred by the Assistant Collector to a suit, and he then brought the present suit in the Assistant Collector's Court, asking for joint possession. He was given a decree subject to the payment of one-fourth of the amount due on the mortgage, and the decree was affirmed by the Additional District Judge on appeal. Narain Das has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

Two points have been argued, one being the question of limitation and the other that of the jurisdiction of the Assistant Collector to try the suit. The case is governed by Art. 144 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, and not by Art. 148 as a co-mortgagor who redeems the whole mortgage does not become a mortgagee of the shares of the co-owners, but merely has a charge on the property: see Vasudev v. Balaji (1) and Basanta v. Dhanna Singh (2). The lower Appellate Court has held that the possession of a co-mortgagor who redeems the entire property does not become adverse to the other mortgagors until he openly asserts an exclusive title, and that as there was no such assertion in the present case the suit is within time. This decision is no doubt supported by Ram Narayan Rai v. Ram Deni Rai (3) but a different view has been taken in other High Courts and their rulings have been referred to and followed in Wazir v. Girdhari (4) by Campbell, J., who has observed that the rule that ordinarily one co-sharer cannot hold adversely against another proceeds upon a rebuttable presumption that the co-sharer in exclusive possession is holding on behalf of the other co-sharers, and that this presumption is rebutted when it is shown that the co-sharer in possession denies the right of the other co-sharers to enter into joint possession until they have paid to him their share of a charge upon the property which he has defrayed. The view taken in Wazir v. Girdhari (4) is, in my opinion, the correct one. The appellant was not holding on behalf of the plaintiff when he was denying the plaintiff's right to enter into possession without payment of his share of the charge on the property. His possession was consequently adverse, and if it has continued for twelve years the suit is barred by limitation. It is contended for the plaintiff that notwithstanding the redemption by the appellant in 1900 the mortgagee remained in possession of the land and that the appellant's possession has not lasted for 12 years. The lower Court has given no finding on this point, but it is unnecessary to remand the case as the appeal must succeed on the ground that the Assistant Collector had no jurisdiction.

The only power which s. 117 of the Land Revenue Act gives to a Revenue Officer acting as a Court is to determine the question of title arising in the partition proceedings, and he has no power under that section to pass a decree for possession of the land of which the title is in dispute. See on this point Lachhmi Bai v. Hondi Bai (5).

I accordingly accept the appeal, reverse the decree, and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Where in a suit in ejectment the Trial Court holds that the defendants have no right of occupancy but dismisses the suit on the ground of its being instituted before the expiry of the agricultural year in which the defendants' predecessor died and on appeal the decree of dismissal is affirmed on the second ground but the Appellate Court gives no finding on the question whether the defendants have a right of occupancy, the decision of the Trial Court that the defendants had no occupancy rights cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for ejectment [p. 981, col. 2]

An under-raiyat may acquire right of occupancy by custom or usage and is not then liable to be ejected. [p. 982, col. 2]

Ordinarily the holding of an under-raiyat whether with or without rights of occupancy is not heritable. [ibid.]

The descendant of an under-raiyat with rights of occupancy, who fails to prove that his predecessor's interest was heritable is a trespasser and, therefore, liable to ejectment [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Midnapore, dated the 12th of May 1922, modifying that of the Munsif, Third Court at Tamluk, dated the 25th of February 1921.

Mr. Mahendra Nath Roy and Babu Santosh Kumar Pal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a decree in ejectment. The predecessor of the defendants was an under-raiyat under the plaintiff.

The main question in this appeal is whether that under-raiyati tenancy descended to the defendants by inheritance. The first Court held that the defendants' predecessor was an under-raiyat with right of occupancy, and that the defendants had succeeded to that right. The lower Appellate Court has held that the defendants had no right of occupancy and were mere trespassers on the land and that the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to a decree for khas possession of the same. We think that the learned Subordinate Judge who decided the case in the lower Appellate Court was in error so far as he held that the question whether the defendants had a right of occupancy in the disputed land was res judicata. In a previous suit in ejectment which was inter partes the Munsif who tried the suit held that the defendants had no right of occupancy but he dismissed the suit on the ground of its being instituted before the expiry of the agricultural year in which the defendants' predecessor died. On appeal that decree of dismissal was affirmed on the second ground and the lower Appellate Court came to no decision on the question whether the defendants had a right of occupancy. The decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Sheosagar Singh v. Sitaram Singh (1) is a clear authority for holding that the decision of the first Court in the former suit did not operate as res judicata in the present suit. But though the lower Appellate Court was wrong on this point and though its judgment is not well-expressed there is a finding apart from that of res judicata which is sufficient to support its decision. It was held that the defendants have failed to prove that the under-raiyat interest of the defendants' predecessor was heritable under some local custom and that even supposing that their predecessor had a right of occupancy therein this is of no benefit to them unless they can prove local custom of heritability. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that this decision is wrong and that if the defendants' predecessor had an occupancy right their right was necessarily heritable. It is now settled law that under ordinary circumstances the right of an under-raiyat is not heritable. No authority has been shown to us in support of the contention that the interest of an under-raiyat with a right of occupancy is heritable.

It is contended that unless an under-raiyat with a right of occupancy has the same benefits which the law gives to a raiyat with occupancy rights he will gain no benefit from such a right. But there is one section in the Bengal Tenancy Act which makes a provision for the benefit of an under-raiyat having an occupancy right and that is s. 183. Further it has been held by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Gopal Mandal v. Tapai Sankhari (2) that an under-raiyat may acquire right of occupancy by custom or usage and is not then liable to be ejected under s. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We are unable to accept the contention that from this decision it follows that when an under-raiyat has a right of occupancy s. 26 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is applicable. Section 26 is by its terms limited to the case of raiyat in respect of his right of occupancy and cannot be held applicable to the case of an under-raiyat who, as already stated, has not, as such, a transferable right in his holding. In the case of a raiyat his holding is heritable whether he is an occupancy-raiyat or a non-occupancy raiyat. In the case of an under-raiyat who has no right of occupancy his holding is certainly not heritable and we can find nothing either in the statutory law or in the case law which would make an exception in the case of an under-raiyat with right of occupancy. We, therefore, hold that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is right on the ground that the defendants having failed to prove that their predecessor's interest was heritable under a local custom, were trespassers on the land and were liable to be ejected without notice.

(2) 44 Ind. Cas. 545; 46 J.C. 43; 28 C. L. J. 81, 22 C. W. N. 618.

It is contended that the lower Appellate Court should have decided the issue which was raised in the first Court whether the defendants had been recognised as tenants after their predecessor's death. That issue was decided against the defendants by the Court of first instance. It does not appear that in the lower Appellate Court a contention was raised on the respondent's behalf that this portion of the first Court's judgment was wrong. It was, therefore, unnecessary for the lower Appellate Court to record a finding on that issue.

We, accordingly, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Lala Mehar Chand Mahajan, for the Appellants.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The house in dispute in the litigation giving rise to this second appeal originally belonged to one Jiwan. Jiwan died some 40 years ago leaving him surviving a widow Musammam Naraini but no issue. Musammam Naraini continued to live in that house with a man named Bhagat Singh. Mathra and others, reversioners of Jiwan, on the 31st October 1921 instituted a suit against Musammam Naraini and Bhagat Singh, alleging that Bhagat Singh was making alterations in the house in suit in such a manner as led the plaintiffs to think that Musammam Naraini had gifted the house to him, and asking for a declaration that the alterations so made and the expenses so incurred would not affect their reversionary rights. Naraini and Bhagat Singh both contested the suit vigorously alleging, inter alia, that they were husband and wife and that the suit was barred by limitation. The Courts below, after a consideration of the evidence led, came to the conclusion that while the plaintiffs were Jiwan's collaterals and, therefore, reversioners, the marriage set up between Musammam Naraini and Bhagat Singh had not been proved, and granted the plaintiffs a decree as prayed. Bhagat Singh has come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan. It appears that Musammam Naraini died while the appeal was pending in the lower Appellate Court.

Mr. Mehr Chand has addressed me on three points. One point was that as Musammam Naraini had died while the appeal was pending in the lower Appellate Court, the lower Appellate Court should have acted in accordance with that what was laid down in Sat Bharai v. Sat Bharai (1) and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. I am, however, not pressed with this contention. The facts in Sat Bharai v. Sat Bharai (1) were quite different. There the Trial Court had refused to grant an injunction and in appeal an injunction was granted after the holder of the limited estate had died.

Next, Mr. Mehr Chand raised an entirely new point and one that had admittedly never been raised nor argued in any of the lower Courts. He urged that, having regard to the provisions of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, the suit as framed was incompetent. He pointed out that what was complained of was that certain structural alterations were being made in the house, and from this he urged it was evident that the status of the plaintiffs was not interfered with in any way and they had no cause of action. Here again I am unable to agree. The plaintiff definitely stated that the structural alterations led the plaintiffs to the conclusion that Musammam Naraini had gifted the property to Bhagat Singh, and the conclusion the plaintiffs came to was that evidence was being created which would affect their rights at a subsequent date. This would give them a right to sue. This view is in consonance with what was held by a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Gandla Pedda Naganna v. Sivanappa (2) where their Lordships say "So far as Madras is concerned, the latest authority is in favour of the position that wherever evidence is being created which might ultimately result in disturbing the title of the plaintiff, he will have a cause of action to sue under s. 42." There can be no doubt that the action taken by Bhagat Singh in the present case might well be regarded as the creation of evidence to support a gift in his favour, and I am therefore of opinion that the suit was competent.

Finally, it was urged that the finding on the question of the marriage between Musammam Naraini and Bhagat Singh, although one of fact, was open to examination, inasmuch as the learned District Judge had not given due weight to the presumption arising out of long and continued cohabitation between a man and woman who were in a position to marry. Reference was made to Indar Singh v. Thakar Singh (3) where it was held that "there is in law a presumption in favour of marriage and against concubinage when a man and woman have cohabited continuously for a number of years and this presumption of law can be repelled only by strong, distinct and conclusive evidence." In the case while the learned District Judge has not specifically referred to long cohabitation, in my judgment it is perfectly clear that he has not lost sight of the fact that these two persons had been living together for a considerable period. The importance of the marriage lies in the fact that if the marriage could be held to have taken place when the cohabitation first began, Musammam Naraini would have forfeited her estate on marriage and the present suit would undoubtedly be barred by limitation. In the present case both of them definitely set up an anand marriage and led evidence to support their allegation, which evidence has been held, wholly unreliable by both Courts. As pointed out by Mr. Faqir Chand, there was every reason why these two should marry, for their marriage would have entailed the forfeiture of Musammat Naraini's estate or, at any rate, the risk of forfeiture and the manner in which Bhagat Singh of recent years began to make alterations in the house is a strong indication that the view taken by the Courts below is correct. It seems to me that Bhagat Singh was endeavouring to create evidence which he could refer back to as showing a gift in his favour.

In these circumstances I must dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiff who is the appellant before this Court sued for a declaration that she had lakheraj and jamai right purchased at auction sale in respect of some 3-annas odd share left by her husband and that she was entitled to the 16-annas rent of the land in question and the defendant had no right in respect of the land. She also asked for a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendant from obstructing her in the realisation of the rents of this land. If it should be found that the plaintiff was not in possession of the land then she sued to recover possession. Her case, as a perusal of the plaint will make quite clear, is that her husband bought the lakheraj right in the land in his own name and with his own money. Subsequent to this he purchased the tenants' right in the land on the 24th of February at a sale in execution of a decree in the name of the defendant No. 1, obtained a certificate of sale and in virtue of this sale certificate obtained possession of the property. Some of the land he kept in his own possession and the rest was let out to tenants. The kabuliyats were in the name of the defendant No. 1 because the sale certificate stood in his name. Umesh Chandra Mukerji the husband of the present plaintiff died leaving no son and the defendant No. 1 taking advantage of this circumstance has persuaded the tenants not to pay rent to the plaintiff. From this the plaintiff realises that the defendant intends to take possession of the property left by her husband and hence she has brought this suit asking that the Court will declare that she has lakheraj and jamai title purchased at auction sale of the 3-annas odd share left by her husband and also a declaration that she is entitled to the 16-annas share of the rent, that the defendant has no title to the property and that her possession may be confirmed. If by any circumstances it be found that she is not in possession then she may recover possession. She also asked for an account from the defendant of any rent that the defendant might have realised from the tenants. The case of the defendant No. 1 who alone has contested this case is that he is the real owner of the property and that s. 66 (old s. 317 of the C. P. C.) is a bar to the suit.

The Trial Court found that defendant No. 1 was the benamdar of the husband of the plaintiff, that the plaintiff had been in possession from the date of purchase up to the institution of the suit, and that the defendant was liable to render accounts to the plaintiff. He found that the plaintiff's suit was not barred by the provisions of s. 66 and ordered that her jamai title and nishkar title to the lands in suit should be declared. The defendant was restrained from interfering with her possession. He was also to render her accounts. Defendant No. 1 appealed to the District Court. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had been dispossessed from the land before the suit and was not now in possession, that the defendant was the benamdar of the plaintiff's husband, that s. 66 was a bar to the suit and ordered that the suit of the plaintiff so far as it related to the jamai right of the plaintiff would be dismissed.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

Her case is if I have understood it rightly as follows:—

(1) That the lower Court has wrongly found that she is not in possession and as she is in possession she is entitled to maintain a suit for confirmation of possession. In support of this contention she relies on the case of Sasti Charan Nundi v. Annapurna (1).

(2) That by payment of rent to the landlord a new tenancy has been created in her favour and that she has a title independent of the purchase by her husband in the name of the defendant and to this title the provisions of s. 66 are not a bar.

(3) That the purchases made by the defendant of the tenancy rights in 1915-16 were made by the defendant as her agent and hence she is entitled to a declaration of her tenancy under these purchases.

Now it seems to me on the facts as found by the learned Subordinate Judge the plaintiff's case must fail and that s. 66 is a bar to her suit.

This suit is governed by the old Code and s. 317 of that Code which corresponds to s. 66 of the present Code is as follows:—

"No suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of any other person, or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims."

Now the case of the plaintiff as made in her plaint is clearly this, that the property was purchased by her husband in the benami of the defendant No. 1. It is nothing else although the learned Advocate for the appellant has spent a day and a half in trying to persuade us that the case of the plaintiff was that she had an independent title by paying rent to the zemindar.

Reading the section as it stands it is quite immaterial whether the plaintiff was or was not in possession at the time of the suit. It seems to me that a declaratory suit equally with a suit to recover possession comes within the mischief of the section.

The plaintiff has relied on the case of Sasti Charan Nundi v. Annapurna (1) and asks us to hold that if she is in possession then s. 66 (317) is no bar to her suit. With due respect to the learned Judges it is very difficult to reconcile this decision with the plain words of the Statute. The learned Judges remark: "Section 317 does not make all benami transactions invalid nor, read with s. 316, does it confer upon the ostensible purchaser a title as against the real purchaser. It merely declares that a suit shall not be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that he was only the ostensible purchaser. The ostensible purchaser could not insist on his certified title to recover from the real owner in possession. If, therefore, the defendant sets up the sale certificate as an answer to the plaintiff's case, there is nothing to prevent the Court from going into the question whether that sale certificate did or did not confer a valid title upon the defendant as against the plaintiff. It is not a case in which the plaintiff, relying on a sale certificate, seeks to obtain a decree for possession against the ostensible purchaser. Resting, as it does, on an existing possession, we do not think that it is a suit of the nature prohibited by s. 317 (present s. 66)."

If I understand the learned Judges aright they would seem to hold that in a suit for confirmation of possession the plaintiff has not to prove his title for obviously s. 66 would be a bar to his maintaining a title based on a benami purchase. Neither do I understand what is meant by a title resting on existing possession. Surely it is not sufficient for a person asking for confirmation of possession to say "I am in possession. Prove that I have no title." As far as I am aware this case stands alone. It has never been followed but has been dissented from. See the case of Hanuman Persad Thakur v. Jadunandan Thakur (2) where Cox, J. points out that if accepted as good law it would practically repeal the whole section. See also the case of Bishan Dial v. Gaziuddin (3). The learned Judge, Strachey, C. J., in considering the case of Sasti Charan Nundi v. Annapurna (1), remarks that if that case holds that s. 317 only applies when the plaintiff being out of possession seeks to recover possession and can never apply to a suit by a plaintiff in possession for a declaration that the certified purchaser out of possession is not the real purchaser he cannot agree with that. I am myself of opinion that it is immaterial whether the plaintiff is in possession and seeks a confirmation of possession or whether he is out of possession and seeks to recover possession. In either case s. 66 applies.

(2) 29 Ind. Cas 787, 20 C. W. N. 147; 43 C. 20.

(3) 23 A. 175, A. W. N. (1901) 44.

The appellant seems also to have attempted somewhat faintly to make out that the property was conveyed to her husband by his being put in possession after the purchase. How this could give the plaintiff any title in the absence of a conveyance as required by the Transfer of Property Act, I admit I do not understand (2). The next argument advanced by the appellant is that she or rather her husband acquired a title independent of her purchase by paying rent to the zemindar. I must admit that this argument was put forward in a somewhat shadowy form. I presume that the learned Advocate meant that she or rather her husband had been recognised by the zemindar. Otherwise I do not understand how any title could be acquired by the mere payment of rent. In order to establish or to attempt to establish this part of his case the learned Advocate was obliged to take us through a large portion of the evidence of the case. The mere necessity for doing this made it at once evident that this had never formed any part of the case of the appellant in either of the Courts below.

It was perfectly obvious that this had never formed any part of the case of the appellant in the lower Courts and it is somewhat difficult to imagine how the learned Advocate for the appellant could have thought that he would be allowed for the first time in second appeal to make out a case which depended on findings of facts which had never been even suggested in the lower Courts.

(3) The appellant lastly attempted to argue that the purchases made by the defendant of certain tenancies as the result of certain decrees obtained in 1915 and 1916 were made by the defendant as the agent of the plaintiff.

Here again the same difficulty confronts us, viz., that this case that these purchases were made by the defendant as the agent of the plaintiff finds no place in the case of the plaintiff either in her plaint or in the case as presented to the lower Courts. It is obviously a question of fact and cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal. In para. 7 of the plaint the plaintiff distinctly sets out that after the death of her husband her son-in-law managed her properties. It is not sufficient to say that a person is an agent. It is necessary to set out what is the scope of the agency in order to determine whether any particular act was done by the person as an agent or not and for this purpose a definite case would have to be made out. The only suggestion in the plaint is that the defendant looked after the suits of the plaintiff.

There is no suggestion that it was any part of his duty to purchase properties on behalf of the plaintiff. The case of Ganga Baksh v. Rudar Singh (4) may be referred to in this connexion.

The result is that the appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Chakravarti, J.—I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

The plaint in this case was framed in open disregard of the provisions of s. 66, C. P. C. The only ground upon which the bar might have been avoided was not taken in either of the Courts below and in the result the defendant retains and enjoys the fruits of his fraud which has been so clearly established. It is only to be hoped that this case will serve as an example for dissuading people from indulgence in the pernicious habit of creating benami title and in some measure further the object with which s. 66, C. P. C., was enacted.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

CIVIL APPEAL No. 1014 OF 1924.

January 14, 1926.

Present:—Mr. Justice Campbell and Mr. Justice Zafar Ali.

versus

ZORAWAR SINGH AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 3—Local Rules —Suit for possession of definite plot out of estate assessed to revenue—Jurisdictional value—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 149—Court-fee, deficient, payment of—Limitation, question of—Pre-emption suit—Improvements by vendee—Compensation

In the Punjab the value of a pre-emption suit for purposes of jurisdiction is 30 times the proportionate amount of revenue recorded as payable for the holding in which the land in suit is comprised even though it be a specified plot by metes and bounds and not a definite share of the holding [p. 987, col. 2]

Where a Court dismisses a suit and simultaneously with the dismissal, orders making up the deficiency in Court-fee, the order should be considered to have been made under s. 149, C. P. C., as the Court is entitled to pass such an order at any stage of the case. In such a case the effect for purposes of limitation is the same as if the Court-fee demanded had been paid in the first instance. [p. 988, col. 1]

A vendee, in a pre-emption suit, is in equity entitled to compensation for improvements effected after the institution of the suit when he had no notice of the institution of the suit and the improvements had been effected after the expiry of the period of limitation for the suit. [p. 988, cols. 1 & 2]

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Senior Sub Judge, Rohtak, dated the 31st January 1921.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Shamair Chand, Sagar Chand and Lala Harish Chandra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a pre-emption suit. The vendor was Anwar Ali and the vendee was Zorawar Singh. The sale was on the 20th of August 1917 ostensibly for Rs. 3,300 of a small plot of one bigha and 15 biswas at Rohtak. The suit was instituted on the 19th of August 1918 in the Court of the Munsif and the plaintiff stated the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction to be 30 times the jama, namely, Rs. 39-10 and for purposes of Court-fee Rs. 13-0-4, the Court-fee being Rs. 1-2-0. The plaintiff alleged that the price mentioned in the sale-deed of Rs. 3,300 was fictitious and that the market value was Rs. 175. The prayer was to pre-empt at that price.

A preliminary issue was framed. "Whether the suit was beyond the jurisdiction of the Court?" and on an admission by the plaintiff's Counsel that it was probably so, the plaintiff was sent to the District Judge with a request that it should be made over to a Court competent to hear it. This was on the 19th of June 1919. Previous to this on the 20th of August 1918, the day after the suit was filed the plaintiff had applied to the Court that the suit should be postponed without issue of summons because the plaintiff, who is the son of the vendor, had then pending another suit for possession of the same land or for a declaration that the sale should not affect his reversionary rights. When this was decided and the present suit was taken up on the 30th of May the defendant vendee was summoned and he then objected that the suit was beyond the jurisdiction of the Munsif.

The District Judge sent the suit to the Junior Sub-Judge who found, firstly, in favour of the plaintiff that the land was not sakni land as alleged by the defendant, secondly, that out of the ostensible sale price, Rs. 1,985 alone were paid, thirdly, that this was the market value of the land, fourthly, that the value of the suit for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction was Rs. 6,038 being the market value of the land plus the ascertained value of improvement effected by the vendee in the shape of buildings. Two other law points which need not be detailed were decided in favour of the plaintiff and then the Court held that the value of improvements as above stated was Rs. 4,053 and that the suit was barred by limitation because it was instituted in a Court which had not jurisdiction to hear it and the date of institution must be taken to be that on which it was transferred by the District Judge to the Junior Subordinate Judge a year and 10 months after the sale. The suit was dismissed with costs. The plaintiff was directed within one month to make up the requisite Court-fee on a valuation of Rs. 6,038 and did so.

The plaintiff has appealed. The land sold is described in the sale-deed as 1 bigha and 15 biswas out of field Nos. 2641 and 2642 as depicted in the plan attached to the deed and finding of the lower Court was that when a specific plot by metes and bounds is the subject of a pre-emption suit the case falls under s. 7 (v) (d) of the Court Fees Act and Court-fee is according to the market value of the land and that the market value also determines the jurisdictional value.

Whatever may be correct Court-fee the learned Sub-Judge was wrong as regards jurisdiction. The rules of the Local Government Punjab are given on page 93, Rules and Orders of the Chief Court, Vol. III and according to the Explanation of r. 1 (b) the value for purposes of jurisdiction of the plot in suit was 30 times the proportionate amount of the revenue recorded as payable for the holding in which the land is comprised, for the land sold was manifestly a portion of part of an estate for which part the land revenue payable is recorded in the Collector's register. This conclusion is not seriously disputed by the learned Counsel for the vendee respondent, but he argues that the Court-fee, at any rate, was due on the market value under s. 7 (v) (d) since that applies where s. 7 (v) (b) does not apply and that s. 7 (v) (b) does not apply because it does not contain any explanation corresponding with that quoted above which is appended to a similar provision enacted by the Local Government under powers conferred by s. 3 of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887. It is not necessary for us to decide this question, because what the learned Counsel alleges to have been the proper fee was in fact paid in the lower Court by the plaintiff in obedience to the order of the Court, and we hold that in giving that order the Court acted under s. 149 of the C. P. C., as it was entitled to do at any stage of the case. The effect was that the plaint became of the same force and effect as if the Court-fee demanded had been paid in the first instance, and it cannot be held now that there was no proper presentation of the plaint within limitation.

So far the plaintiff-appellant succeeds, but in his further contention that no compensation for improvements should be allowed and that the amount of such compensation estimated by the lower Court is excessive we are not disposed to dissent from the findings of the learned Sub-Judge. The buildings we find were commenced in March 1919, that is to say after the institution of the suit, but no notice of the suit was given to the defendant vendee and the suit itself was instituted on the last day of limitation. It is clear what the plaintiff's position was. He had attacked the alienation in another way with a view to its being nullified without cost to himself, but as a second string to his bow he deemed it advisable to institute a suit for pre-emption. He, however, was guilty of the blunder of asking for the pre-emption suit to be stayed without issue of process to the defendant. What he should have done was to have the defendants served with summons and then to ask for the suit to be stayed. In that case the defendant would have had no justification in claiming compensation for improvements begun after the institution of the suit. But, since it is not shown that the defendant knew anything about this pre-emption suit before he erected his buildings, he is in equity entitled to compensation, and the fact that the other suit was in progress does not appear to us to be material at all. The other suit in the event was dismissed and the dismissal was upheld in appeal. The defendant was entitled to run the risk of commencing his buildings during the pendency of the other suit, which he considered with justice to be a weak one, and to assume that since the statutory period of limitation one year from the sale had elapsed, he was safe from a pre-emption suit.

We have heard arguments on the valuation of the improvements. The defendant produced a witness who made out the figure to be Rs. 4,902. The plaintiff produced a retired Executive Engineer who made it Rs. 3,117-15-10. The Court appointed L. Bishambar Dayal, District Engineer, as Commissioner and his estimate was Rs. 4,053. It has been claimed for the plaintiff that this figure should be reduced because it included 10 per cent. contractor's profit and because L. Bishambar Dayal stated in cross-examination that his calculation was based on present rates which had increased during the last two years. We find that the plaintiff's witness also included 10 per cent. contractor's profit and we consider that the explanation given by L. Bishambar Dayal for including them is reasonable. As regards the admission of increase of the rates, the witness was speaking of buildings constructed not two years or more previously, but one year only, and he was not properly cross-examined as he should have been by the plaintiff to elicit whether there had been any increase in the rates during the previous one year.

We accept the appeal and give the plaintiff a decree for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 1,985 plus Rs. 4,053 total Rs. 6,038 on or before a date three months from the date of decree. The decree shall be drawn up in accordance with O. XX, r. 14 (1), C. P. C. As regards costs, each party has had its success both in this Court and in the lower Court and we order the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 578 OF 1923.

October 23, 1925.

Present :—Mr. Justice Devadoss.P. KUTHALINGA MUDALIAR—*DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANTversusM. N. SHANMUGA MUDALIAR AND*OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANT No. 2*—RESPONDENTS.Hindu Law—Widow—Maintenance—Sale of property—Future maintenance*

A Hindu widow is entitled to maintain herself by selling the property inherited from her husband if there is no other means available for her maintenance. She is not bound to starve herself in order to benefit the reversioners. [p 990, cols 1 & 2]

Under the Hindu Law a widow can alienate her husband's property for paying off the debts incurred for her own maintenance. There is no hard and fast rule that she cannot do it for future maintenance. Each case would depend upon its circumstances. [p 989, col 2]

In a case where there was no other property but a house inherited by a widow and not capable of yielding any appreciable income, and the widow sold it for Rs 600 half of which went towards liquidating a debt incurred for maintenance and the other half was kept by her for maintaining herself with.

Held, that the sale was binding in its entirety upon the reversioner. [p 990, col 2]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Tinnevely, in A. S. No. 53 of 1922 (A. S. No. 691 of 1922, District Court), preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Tenkasi, in O. S. No. 104 of 1920 (O. S. No. 402 of 1919, District Munsif's Court, Ambasamudram).

Mr. S. Ramaswamy Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Venkateswaran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only point in this appeal is whether the sale should be upheld in view of the findings of fact of the learned Subordinate Judge. He has found that out of the consideration of Rs. 600, Rs. 300 went towards discharging the debts binding on the reversioner and the other Rs. 300 was for the maintenance of the second defendant. The second defendant who is a widow, was unable to maintain herself out of the income of her husband's property, which consisted only of the plaint house, and was obliged to borrow. It has been proved satisfactorily and has been found by the Judge that she did incur a debt of Rs. 300 in order to maintain herself. The property left by the husband was only a house which produced no income. She had to sell the house for the purpose of paying off the debt already incurred and for maintaining herself. It is not suggested that the house was worth more than Rs. 600 paid by the plaintiff for the sale. The Subordinate Judge has set aside the sale of the property with regard to a half and has upheld the sale as regards the other half. It is difficult to see how a house like this could be divided into two halves. No doubt if the house can be divided into two halves, it might be said that his order is sustainable. But this being a small house in a town and in the absence of any evidence that the house could be divided into two equal moieties and that the two moieties could be conveniently enjoyed, such a decree cannot be said to be correct.

The question is whether the sale of the property should be upheld or not. The Subordinate Judge seems to think that a widow cannot alienate property for future maintenance. It is well-settled that a widow can alienate her husband's property for paying off the debts incurred for her own maintenance. The question is whether she can do so for future maintenance? There is no hard and fast rule that a widow cannot alienate property for future maintenance. Each case would depend upon its circumstances. In this case there is no other property and the only property is not capable of yielding any appreciable income. I do not see why the widow should starve herself in order to benefit the reversioners. It is admitted by the plaintiff that the widow (2nd defendant) is living by begging. If that is so, there is every reason why she should find means to support herself by selling the only property that descended to her from her husband. No doubt if there are other properties from which she could get some income it may be said that she is not justified in selling the house. Where land of considerable extent is sold and only a part of the consideration is found to be binding on the reversioner, it may be a question for the Court, whether a portion of the land should be taken by the alienee and the rest should be released from the sale. But in a case like this I see no reason why in order to benefit the reversioner the widow should be prevented from enjoying the proceeds of the sale. As I have already observed, it is not suggested that the sale is not a bona fide one. On the other hand it is clear that Rs. 600 was paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar half of which went towards liquidating the debt incurred for maintenance and the other half was kept for maintaining herself with. It is unnecessary to discuss this point at any length as I am quite satisfied that in this case the widow had no other means of maintaining herself than by selling the only property that descended to her.

Mr. Ramaswami Aiyar referred to Naman Mal v. Har Bhagwan (1) in support of his contention that the sale should be upheld. In that case the learned Judges held that the proposition that a widow cannot anticipate personal necessity is not an inflexible rule. In Kulak Chandra Das v. Kula Chandra Das (2) a Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that a widow need not borrow at an usurious rate of interest for maintaining herself and then allow the property to be sold by the creditor by bringing a suit against her. I think that a widow borrowing in order to maintain herself and then allowing the property of her husband to be sold for the debt incurred by her for maintenance would not be acting in the interests of the reversioners, for the interest and the costs would amount to a large amount and a prudent person would rather sell the property and get ready cash than borrow at an usurious rate of interest and there allow the creditor to file a suit and bring the property to sale and thereby cause loss to the reversioners. The same principle has been laid down in Kannu Chetty v. Amirthammal (3) and Bala Krishna Das v. Hira Lal (4). On the other side I am referred to the decision in Appajee Panthulu v. Ramacharlu (5) as supporting the contention of the respondent that the sale should be set aside inasmuch as a portion of the consideration was for maintenance. On a perusal of the case I am unable to find that any principle was laid down in that case. The learned Judges found that considerable suspicion attached to the transaction and in the circumstances they set aside the alienation by the widow. There was no question of the maintenance of the widow in that case. A widow is entitled to live by selling the property of the husband if there is no other means available for her maintenance. As I have already observed, no widow is bound to starve herself or die in order to benefit the reversioners. Such a proposition would be monstrous and opposed to all principles of Hindu Law. Dhondhia v. Hekayat Pandey (6) and Paparayudu v. Rattamma (7) do not apply to the facts of the present case. No doubt, if the sale is not found to be a bona fide sale, the plaintiff would be entitled to have it set aside. But in this case I am quite satisfied that the proper decree would be to allow the sale to stand inasmuch as the transaction was a bona fide one and the consideration was for purposes which could bind the reversioners.

I allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

The memorandum of objections is dismissed. No costs.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 31st January 1925, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Rawalpindi, dated the 26th November 1923.

Lala Gobind Ram Khanna, for the Appellant

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Kala Khan and his brother Nathu Khan defendant No. 1 jointly owned khasra No. 1258-1. On the 9th February 1918 Nathu Khan sold a portion of that khasra number to Dalbir Chand and Sundar Dass and on the 13th February he sold the remainder to Ishar Das and Harnam Das defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Defendants Nos. 4, 6, 8 and 10 brought separate suits for pre-emption in respect of the latter sale and obtained decrees, and afterwards transferred their shares to defendants Nos. 5, 7 and 9. The plaintiff sues for possession of his half share of the land sold by his brother to defendants Nos. 2 and 3, contending that his brother had no right to sell it, and he also claims the other half by right of pre-emption.

The suit has been dismissed, the Courts below having agreed in finding that it has been brought in collusion with Ishar Das defendant No. 2, and that the plaintiff had, by a letter written from Basra on the 29th September 1917, authorised Nathu Khan to sell the former's half share in the land. The plaintiff has preferred a second appeal, contending that his consent to the sale is not legally proved.

The letter from the plaintiff authorising Nathu Khan to sell the land, though not forthcoming is referred to in the two sale-deeds executed by the latter, and Sundar Das proves its existence at the time when Nathu Khan executed the sale-deed in favour of Dalbir Chand and himself. Hira Nand, through whom the sales by Nathu Khan were effected, also proves the existence of the letter, and says that he made it over to some of the vendees, though he cannot say to which. As the letter is now suppressed by the vendees, into whose possession it came, and the suit has been found to have been brought in collusion with them, I think that it is fair to presume that it was the plaintiff who wrote the letter.

It is argued for the plaintiff that the letter was a power-of-attorney as defined in s. 2 (21) of the Stamp Act, and that as it was unstamped it would have been inadmissible in evidence, and, therefore, secondary evidence of its contents is also inadmissible. There is, however, nothing to show that Nathu Khan was empowered by the letter to sell the land in "the plaintiff's name", and if no such power was given to him the letter, though it gave Nathu Khan authority to sell the land, would not fall within the definition of "power-of-attorney" contained in the Stamp Act. Another point taken is that the letter would not debar the plaintiff from repudiating the sale when it is not shown that he agreed to any particular price, but there is no force in this argument, as in giving a general authority to Nathu Khan to sell his share he must be taken to have left it to Nathu Khan to settle the price, and it may be observed that there has been no allegation that the price for which the land was sold was not a fair price.

I agree, therefore, with the Courts below that the plaintiff is precluded from suing to recover his share of the land by the fact of his having authorised his brother to sell it.

As regards the claim for pre-emption the fact appears to be that the plaintiff acquiesced in the sale of Nathu Khan's share, besides authorising the sale of his own share. Hira Nand has stated that he suggested to Nathu Khan that he should obtain the plaintiff's written consent to the sale of his (plaintiff's) share, as without it no one would be willing to buy the land. Evidently Nathu Khan must have written to his brother, telling him that he proposed to sell the land, and asking for his authority to sell his (plaintiff's) share, and it was in reply to such a letter that the plaintiff wrote the letter which has been referred to above. It does not stand to reason that the plaintiff, while consenting to the sale of his own half share, reserved his right to pre-empt his brother's half.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

An appeal from an award under the Land Acquisition Act is governed for purposes of Court-fee by s. 8 and not by Art 17 (iv) of Sch II to the Court Fees Act, as the former, being a special provision relating to the awards of compensation under the Land Acquisition Act overrides the general provisions of the latter. First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Rohtak at Karnal, dated the 22nd January 1925.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for Mr. F. Byrne and Lala Nanwan Mal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—1482 square yards of land in village Dhigal were acquired under the Land Acquisition Act for a school and the Collector assessed the value at Rs. 2,130-6-0. There are four Panas or sub-divisions in the village. Two of them did not claim any part of the land to be theirs. The proprietors of Chauth sub-division claimed the whole area to be theirs, while those of Malian sub-division claimed that 792 square yards of the whole area of 1482 square yards were theirs. The Collector under s. 30 of the Land Acquisition Act referred the dispute for the decision of the District Court as it was a dispute "as to the persons to whom any part of the compensation money was payable". The Collector could have himself decided the question, leaving the aggrieved party to apply to him for a reference to the Court under s. 18 of the Act. This, however, makes no difference. The District Court held that Thula Lakhmian of Pana Chauth was entitled to the entire compensation as the land belonged exclusively to it. It accordingly awarded the full sum of Rs. 2,130-6 to be paid to it, and it was stated at the bar that it has in fact been paid. Nothing was awarded to the applicants. On the 22nd April the appellants through Counsel filed this appeal against the above decision on a four-rupee stamp. He was asked by the office the same day as to how a Court-fee of Rs. 4 only had been paid. On the 4th May he re-filed the appeal, stating that the Court-fee was correct as it was a miscellaneous appeal. That very day, his attention was drawn by the office to s. 8 of the Court Fees Act and he was directed to pay ad valorem Court-fee by 4 p. m. the next day, apparently as the period of limitation expired then. On the 5th May he asked that the time should be extended to him as he had to get the Additional Court-fees from his clients. He was told on the 6th May that time could not be extended to him beyond the period of limitation. Then on the 12th May he affixed a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 on the ground that the appeal fell under Art. 17 (iv) of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act and not under cl. (8) of the Court Fees Act. The appeal was admitted to a hearing on the 11th June subject to any question which might be raised relating to the Court-fee payable and to limitation.

Counsel for the respondents raised a preliminary objection that the appeal is barred by limitation. It is quite clear that the appellants are claiming in appeal 792/1482 of Rs. 2,130 6-0, on the ground that they owned 792 square yards out of 1482 square yards acquired and are entitled to the compensation for that area. This sum can be accurately calculated and comes to be a little more than half of Rs. 2,130 6-0. It cannot, therefore, be said that the appeal is incapable of valuation (Sch. II, Art. 17 (iv) of the Limitation Act). It also does not fall under Art. 17 (iv) as an appeal to set aside an award because s. 8 of the Court Fees Act being a special provision, relating to the awards of compensation under the Land Acquisition Act, overrides the general provisions of Sch. II, Art. 17 (iv) [see Kasturi Chetti v. Deputy Collector, Bellary (1)]. Besides, the words of s. 8 of the Court Fees Act are very wide. They are as follows:—

"The amount of fee payable under this Act on memorandum of appeal against an order relating to compensation under any Act for the time being in force for the acquisition of land for public purposes shall be computed according to the difference between the amount awarded and the amount claimed by the appellant."

The present appeal is against an order awarding all the compensation to the respondents whereas the appellants claim a definite sum out of the compensation. That is, nothing was awarded to them while they claim more than half. Court-fees were, therefore, payable on the sum they claim should have been awarded to them. The matter is beyond dispute and though the appellants' Counsel was at once put upon his guard by the office, still the necessary Court-fees were not put in within the period of limitation and when extra Court-fees were put in after the period of limitation, the provisions of s 8 were still not followed though the section had been quoted by the office. It is further clear from the order of the Judges admitting the appeal in June that this was a matter that was bound to arise and still Court-fees have up till the present not been filed. Even if, therefore, Ramji Lal, one of the appellants, thought a Court-fee of Rs. 4 only was necessary, there has obviously been gross negligence both on the part of the appellants and of Counsel in not filing the Court-fees either at once on the office objection or when the appeal was admitted to a hearing. In my judgment they are not entitled to any extension of time after these dates. The law is so clear that no mistake should have been made in the first instance and for this reason also time cannot be extended. A bona fide act is one done with due care and attention [Resal Singh v. Shadi (2)]

I, therefore, hold that the appeal is barred by limitation as up to date the proper Court-fees have not been put in and no sufficient cause has been shown as to why this has not been done. I accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Kasganj, dated the 9th April 1925.

Mr. Ladli Prasad Zutshi, for the Applicants.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision against a Small Cause Court decree awarding compensation for short delivery of betel leaves consigned by the G. I. P. and B. B. and C. I. Railway Companies. The applicants are quite right in asserting that the only loss for which the Railway can be held accountable under Risk Note H which applies to this case, even in case of wilful negligence must be loss of a complete consignment or of a complete package or packages forming part of such consignment. The decree may, however, be supported on another ground. The plaintiff did not come into Court alleging loss. He merely alleged that so much betel leaves had been booked by the Railway and that the full amount had not been delivered. There is a long series of cases commencing with Ghelabhai Punsi v. East Indian Railway Co. (1) and including several cases of this Court, e.g., East Indian Railway Co. v. Firm Kishin Lal-Tirkhamal (2) and East Indian Railway Co. v. Firm Gopi Krishna-Kashi Prasad (3) as well as East Indian Railway Co. v. Jagpat Singh (4) which lay down that where a plaintiff does not come into Court on the ground of loss, destruction or deterioration, the Railway Company must prove that the goods have been lost or destroyed, or have deteriorated before they can claim the protection of the Risk Note. I may add that the judgment complained of was delivered on 9th April and that this revision was not filed until 5th November. The delay of nearly seven months in filing the application would in itself have been a sufficient ground for declining to accept it.

For the reasons already given I dismiss the application with costs.

Limitation for a suit to recover compensation for damage caused to the plaintiffs' building by the action of the defendants in closing up certain drains which emitted water from the plaintiffs' building on to the defendants' premises is two years from the date of the damage.

The action of the defendants in closing up the drains and thereby causing damage to plaintiffs' building is a continuing wrong as contemplated by s. 23, Limitation Act.

In cases of continuing wrongs the date of the damage is the date of the malfeasance within the meaning of Art. 36 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Broadway, passed in Civil Appeal No. 2596 of 1923, on the 5th March 1924, affirming that of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 9th August 1923, (which reversed that of the Munsif, First Class, Jhajjar, District Rohtak, dated the 28th August 1922).

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Sagar Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. J. Rustamji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an action to recover Rs. 400 as compensation for damage caused to the plaintiffs' building by the action of the defendants in closing up certain drains which emitted water from the plaintiffs' building on to the defendants' premises; and the sole question for decision is whether the suit is within time.

The alleged damage is said to have occurred between August 1918 and September 1920, but obstruction took place in September 1917 and the suit was instituted on the 21st May 1921. The District Judge assessed the damage at Rs. 60 and the decree was affirmed by this Court in single Bench.

A preliminary objection was raised that the suit was a small cause and the learned Judge in Chambers had no jurisdiction. But adjudication on this point was not prayed for from the Court below and it cannot be heard now for the first time.

For the appellants it is urged that s. 23 of the Limitation Act has been wrongly applied to the facts of this case as the wrong was not a continuing wrong, but we have no hesitation in holding that the wrong was a continuing wrong and that the provisions of s. 23 of the Limitation Act have been properly applied.

On the next point, however, we think the appeal must succeed. It is urged that the limitation for the suit is two years under Art. 36 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act. On the allegation in the plaint at any rate a portion of the damage occurred prior to the 21st of May 1919 and there is no evidence to show how much damage was caused after that date and within two years of suit.

For the respondents it is contended that Art. 36 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act does not apply and that Art. 120 furnishes the proper period of limitation. Article 120 is, however, a residuary Article and applies only when no other specific Article governs the case. Clearly the act of the defendants in obstructing the drains in defiance of an injunction obtained by the plaintiffs was an act of malfeasance. Article 36 covers the facts of this case, and the effect of that Article read with s. 23 of the Act is, that the suit must be brought within two years from the date when the malfeasance takes place but that inasmuch as the offence is a continuing one, the date of the damage shall be deemed to be the date of the malfeasance.

In the absence of evidence as to the amount of damage which occurred within two years of suit the suit must fail. We accordingly accept the appeal and dismiss the suit, but in the special circumstances of the case direct that parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

—OPPOSITE PARTIES.Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 198—Tenant and sub-tenant—Ejectment suit—Sub-tenant claiming to be tenant himself—Proprietary title, question of, whether involved—Appeal, forum of

In a suit by an occupancy tenant to eject a sub-tenant, where the latter alleges that he is himself the tenant-in-chief and is holding directly under the proprietor, no question of proprietary title is involved within s. 198 of the Agra Tenancy Act, and an appeal against the decision of the Assistant Collector lies to the Revenue Court and not to the Civil Court. [p. 996, col. 1.]

Niranjan v. Gajadhar, 30 A. L. J. 71, A. W. N. (1908) 45, followed.

The words "land-holder" and "tenant" do not in s. 198 (1) of the Agra Tenancy Act embrace "tenant" and his "sub-tenant" [p. 999, col. 1.]

Per Boys, J.—There is nothing in the heading preceding s. 198 of the Agra Tenancy Act or in s. 198 (1) to indicate that in a case coming within s. 198 (1) a question of proprietary title is necessarily in issue. Rather are all the indications to the contrary. The answer to the question whether a matter of proprietary title is in issue cannot be based on any conclusion that the case is or is not within s. 198 but must be answered independently of s. 198 [p. 1000, col. 1.]

Reference under s. 195 of the Agra Tenancy Act made by the Collector, Basti.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad (with him Mr. Sankar Saran), for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.

Dalal, J.—This is a Reference to this Court made by the Collector of Basti under s. 195 of the Tenancy Act, because he doubted whether the appeal pending before him in a particular matter should be filed in a Civil or a Revenue Court. One Kashi Chamar sued the defendant, Baldeo Kurmi, for ejectment; and one of the grounds of defence was that the defendant cultivated the land in dispute as tenant of the Raja of Bansi and paid rent to him. The plaintiff's case was that he was an occupancy tenant of the land and Baldeo Kurmi was his sub-tenant. The Assistant Collector decided that Kashi was occupancy tenant of the land and that Baldeo was his sub-tenant.

The learned Collector was of opinion that the appeal would lie to a Civil Court if the principle of the ruling in the case of Har Prasad v. Tajammul Hussain (1) were followed. The Board of Revenue has dissented from that ruling in Kundan v. Jawahir (2).

In my opinion, the facts of this case do not call for a decision as to which of the views in the two judgments is correct. The question before me is covered by authority. In Niranjan v. Gajadhar (3) one Niranjan applied as owner of a fixed rate holding for ejectment of Gajadhar on the ground that Gajadhar was his sub-tenant. The Assistant Collector dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge who made a reference to this Court, as he was not in agreement with a Single Judge decision of this Court in Chhittar Singh v. Rup Singh (4). A Bench of this Court held that the appeal lay to the Revenue Court and not to the Civil Court.

It was argued here that the question in dispute between the tenant and sub-tenant is one of proprietary title in accordance with the provisions of s. 198 of the Tenancy Act. The heading of that section in Ch. XIV of the Tenancy Act is "Questions of proprietary title in Revenue Court." Section 198 lays down "When in any suit against a tenant under this Act, the defendant pleads that the relation of land-holder and tenant does not exist between the plaintiff and himself on the ground that he actually and in good faith pays the rent of his holding to some third person, the question of such payment of the rent to such third person shall be inquired into, and, if the question is decided in favour of the defendant, the suit shall be dismissed." The second clause of this section lays down "The decision of the Court on such question shall not affect the right of any person entitled to the rent of the holding to establish his title by suit in the Civil Court." It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that, according to the terms of the first clause of this section, the question as to whether Kashi actually and in good faith paid the rent of his holding to the Raja of Bansi was a question of proprietary title and that had to be decided in the appeal pending before the Collector of Basti. In my opinion, land-holder and tenant do not mean tenant and sub-tenant, as they would have to mean in order to support the argument of the plaintiff's learned Counsel. Sub-tenant is separately defined in s. 4 of the Tenancy Act and the term 'tenant' is not defined as including a sub-tenant. A sub-tenant is not a class of tenants enumerated in s. 6; so a sub-tenant cannot be called non-occupancy tenant in s. 19 of the Act. A discussion of the terms of s. 198 of the Tenancy Act, therefore, does not arise here and I am not called upon to determine whether the Bench decision in the case of Niranjan may be supported or not.

A dispute between a tenant and a sub-tenant raises no question of proprietary title. The suit being one for ejectment, the appeal would go out of the cognizance of the Revenue Court only if a question of proprietary title had been in issue in the Court of first instance and is a matter in issue in the appeal. No such question arises here, so the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court is not ousted as laid down by Sch. IV, Group C, Serial No. 29.

Presumably the words landlord and tenant have been used in s. 63 to include tenant and sub-tenant and, if the analogy be applied to s. 198, I am of opinion that the decision reported in Har Prasad v. Tajammul Hussain (1) is not correct. The provisions of s. 198 are to be read in contradistinction to the provisions of s. 199, Tenancy Act. The decision of the Revenue Court under s. 198 is not binding on a Civil Court, while that under s. 199 is. The proprietary title contemplated is not the dispute between the parties to the suit but the one between the plaintiff land-holder and the third person, to whom the defendant alleged that he paid rent in good faith. Such a dispute over a proprietary title was involved in the decision of the question of payment to some one other than the plaintiff in good faith. That is the dispute which is referred to as one of proprietary title in the heading over s. 198. The dispute between the parties to the suit is to be kept strictly in the Revenue Court; otherwise there would be no necessity to permit of a suit in the Civil Court. If the appeal in such a case lay to the Civil Court, the decision of the Civil Court would be binding on another Civil Court and there would be no object in providing a saving clause, as is done in s. 198.

In the present case the pleadings and judgment of the Trial Court are wanting in definiteness. The defendant probably desired to raise such a defence as is mentioned in s. 198 but no allegation was made in the written statement of payment of rent being made to the Raja of Bansi in good faith. The Trial Court framed no issue on the question of the payment of rent to a third person in good faith.

If the case is taken out of the provisions of s. 198, there can be no doubt that no issue of a claim to a proprietary title arises between the parties here.

It will not be found possible to reduce the different rulings of this Court to one or more consistent principles of law; so I think that every matter should be decided on a different principle of law in accordance with previous decisions on similar facts. Mr. Justice Banerji consistently took the extreme view in favour of the Civil Court's jurisdiction, as stated in Chhittar Singh's case (4) and was able to impress this view on Benches of which he was a member. If this view had been consistently adopted, the different decisions could have been referred to a uniform principle of law but other Judges when not sitting with Mr. Justice Banerji did not adopt this view. Mr. Justice Tudball, the other member of the Bench in the case reported as Har Prasad v. Tajammul Hussain (1) did not follow the principle of that ruling to its logical conclusion in Gurcharan Kuar v. Deokinandan Kuar (5) when sitting singly. I agree with this decision that when the title to a tenure is in dispute, the jurisdiction of a Civil Court does not arise. The Full Bench ruling, however, in Bindeshwari v. Gokul (6) (Chief Justice Banerji and Ryves, JJ.) following Dalchand v. Shamla (7), (Blair and Banerji, JJ.) and dissenting from Udit Tiwari v. Balhari Pande (8) (Tudball and Piggott, JJ.) is in conflict with this opinion. There the dispute between the parties related to the possession of a holding. A claimed to be tenant and alleged that B was his sub-tenant. B was one of the proprietors of the village and A admitted this fact. A's contention was that the tenure was his while B alleged that he held it as khudkasht. In reality the dispute related to a tenure and not to any interest in revenue paying property.

It is enough for me to say that, in this present case, my opinion in favour of the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court is supported by rulings in Niranjan v. Gajadhar

(3), Daulatia v. Hargobind (9) and Gurcharan Kuar v. Deokinandan Kuar (5) and that rulings to the contrary on similar facts have not come to my notice. It may be conceded that certain principles enumerated in other rulings, if pressed to their logical conclusion, would not support the view.

My answer to the reference is that the appeal was correctly filed in the Revenue Court.

Boys, J.—The plaintiff sued to eject the defendant on the allegation that he, the plaintiff, was an occupancy tenant and that the defendant was his sub-tenant. The defendant replied that the plaintiff had nothing to do with the plot of land and that the defendant himself was the tenant-in-chief. There is no dispute as to who is the proprietor of the plot, the parties are agreed on this point. The Assistant Collector gave the plaintiff a decree. Upon appeal to the Collector, he has referred the matter for the opinion of this Court under s. 195 of the Agra Tenancy Act. He has been led to adopt this course because of a difference, as suggested, between the law as laid down on the one hand in Har Prasad v. Tajammul Hussain (1) (Banerji and Tudball, JJ.), and Tulhi v. Ramraj (10) (Gokul Prasad, J.) and on the other in Kundan v. Jawahir (2). The Collector expresses his difficulty in the following terms.—‘That in the first two cases it has been held that in suits for ejectment in which the defendant pleaded that a third person and not the plaintiff was the zemindar of the land in dispute and the Court decided the question of proprietary title, the appeal lay to the District Judge, that in this suit the defence set up comes under s. 198 and if these two decisions are followed the Court of the Collector has no jurisdiction; that in the third case the Board declined to follow the first decision of the High Court (the other decision of the High Court was of later date) and held that in a case of this nature no question of proprietary title arose and that the appeal, therefore, lay to the Revenue Court.’ In consequence of this difference of opinion he has referred the case.

I will first consider the authorities apart from any effect that s. 198 may have.

In Har Prasad v. Tajammul Hussain (1) the defendant claimed to be lessee of another person (semble a different proprietor), and in Tulhi v. Ramraj (10) the defendant alleged that the plot belonged to another village and that he had been paying rent to the proprietor of that village. In both these cases it will be seen that there was in the back-ground the existence, alleged by the defendant, of another proprietor other than the proprietor under whom plaintiff held. On the other hand in the case decided by the Board, Kundan v. Jawahir (2), there was not even in the back-ground any question of any other proprietor, both plaintiff and defendant were in agreement as to who was proprietor. This latter is also the case in the question before us. Similarly in Niranjana v. Gajadhar (3) where the plaintiff claimed as fixed rate tenant to eject the defendant as his sub-tenant while the defendant contended that he himself was the fixed rate tenant, both parties apparently claimed to hold under the same proprietor. In that case a Bench of this Court, Knox and Aikman, JJ., held that “when there is a question whether one party or the other is the cultivator of specified land, no question of proprietary right arises.” The earlier contrary view expressed in the judgment of Mr. Justice Banerji and reported in Chhittar v. Rup Singh (4) was dissented from.

We have, therefore, two cases of this Court Har Prasad v. Tajammul Hussain (1) (decided by a Bench) and Tulhi v. Ramraj (10) (of a Single Judge), in both of which it was held that a question of proprietary title was in issue but in both of which there was alleged to be another proprietor whose tenant the defendant was. On the other hand we have a case of the Board, Kundan v. Jawahir (2) and a decision of a Bench of this Court Niranjana v. Gajadhar (3) in both of which it was held that no question of proprietary title was in issue but in both of which there was no dispute even in the background as to who was the proprietor, both parties to the suit admitting the same person to be proprietor. The facts of the present case are the same as in the two latter cases.

Whether or no the two former cases can be distinguished from the two latter cases on the ground that in the former there was contention between the disputant tenants as to who was the proprietor while in the two latter cases there was no such contention, is a question into which I need not enter for the decision in the two former cases was not based on the fact that there were two proprietors in the background with conflicting interests but on the ground that the cases came within s. 198 and were, therefore, as it was held, necessarily cases of proprietary title being in issue. To s. 198 I shall refer later. So far as the present case is concerned it is on all fours with Kundan v. Jawahir (2) and Niranjan v. Gajadhar (3) and I have no hesitation in holding that those cases were rightly decided. A mere statement of the cases there and in the present case, namely, that the question who is the proprietor is not in dispute, even in the background, but that there is a proprietor admitted by both parties to be proprietor, and that only two persons both of whom are admittedly tenants of one sort or another are contending with each other itself suggests irresistably that there is no question of the proprietary title in issue.

I turn now to a consideration of s. 198. It is frankly admitted by Mr. Harnandan Prasad, (who, appearing for the defendant, contends that the Collector has no jurisdiction to hear the appeal) that the decision in Niranjan v. Gajadhar (3) is against him. But he urges that in Har Prasad v. Tajammal Hussain (1) and Tulhi v. Ramraj (10) the Court rightly considered and relied on s. 198; that in Niranjan v. Gajadhar (3) the Court did not consider s. 198; that it should have done so and we should do so in the present case. His conclusion is two-fold:— (a) that the present case comes within the terms of s. 198, (b) that the case coming under s. 198, it follows that a question of proprietary title is in issue because the heading immediately preceding s. 198 describes the case which follow that heading as being cases involving a question of proprietary title.

I quote the heading and the section in extenso as nearly every line is suggestive of the carrying out of the intention, as I understand it, of the Legislature.

"Questions of proprietary title in Revenue Court." "198(1). When, in any suit against a tenant under this Act, the defendant pleads that the relation of land-holder and tenant does not exist between the plaintiff and himself on the ground that he actually and in good faith pays the rent of his holding to some third person, the question of such payment of the rent to such third person shall be inquired into, and if the question is decided in favour of the defendant, the suit shall be dismissed."

"(2) The decision of the Court on such question shall not affect the right of any person entitled to the rent of the holding to establish his title by suit in the Civil Court".

To come to the first part of the argument for defendant, that the present case comes within s. 198.

Is the plaintiff occupancy tenant a land-holder and is the defendant sub-tenant a tenant within the meaning of s. 198.

Section 4 (5) declares "land-holder" means the person to whom, and 'tenant' the person by whom rent is payable." Section 4 (7) begins "sub-tenant" means a tenant who, etc." i. e., it declares that a sub-tenant is a tenant though he is a tenant of a particular kind. The definitions are wide enough to include in "land-holder" and "tenant" an "occupancy tenant" and his "sub-tenant" respectively "unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context" (see the opening words of s. 4). Is there anything repugnant in the subject or context in s. 198? Is there anything in s. 198 justifying a restriction of the scope of the words 'land-holder' and "tenant" to "proprietor" and "tenant-in-chief"? I think there is.

Let us suppose in a case like the present the words to be wide enough to include an "occupancy tenant" A and his "sub-tenant" B. A sues to eject B. B denies the relationship of landlord and tenant on the ground that he has been paying rent in good faith to C. The Court is to inquire into the facts of the actual payments and the good faith of the payments and if the decision on these points is in favour of B the suit is to be dismissed. It will be noted that herein there is no provision for the decision of the question of A's right to receive the rent though A may have ample proof of that right. What remedy then has A? He can appeal, of course, until he has exhausted his right of appeal, but if the decision of the facts of actual payments in good faith is upheld he will still be unable to establish his right to receive the rents. Nor can he file a separate suit in the Civil Court to establish that right. Section 198 (2) gives him no such right; it gives no right at all to anybody; it merely declares that any existing right of any person entitled to the rent to establish his title by suit in the Civil Court shall not be prejudiced. If, therefore, s. 198 applies and the suit in the Revenue Court is decided against A on the ground of actual payments made in good faith by B to C he is left without remedy. There is, therefore, as I view it, matter in s. 198 which is repugnant to the application of the definitions of "land-holder" and "tenant" in their widest sense to those words as used in s. 198 (1).

If such a case as the present comes within s. 198 and if the plaintiff, where the decision under s. 198 (1) is against him and his suit is dismissed, has a remedy by a suit in the Civil Court to get his right to receive the rent declared, we have the plaintiff's right being determined in a Civil Court. But if the decision under s. 198 (1) was in plaintiff's favour, there is no provision for the plaintiff being referred to a Civil Court to establish his right to receive the rent; the Revenue Court would have to proceed in the ordinary course to the determination of the question of the plaintiff's right. If, therefore, the argument for the defendant were to be accepted the very same question of plaintiff's right to rent would have to be determined by the Civil Court or by the Revenue Court according as the decision under s. 198 (1) was adverse or favourable to the plaintiff. This is a further reason for holding that a case such as the present does not come within s. 198.

I hold then that the words "land-holder" and "tenant" do not in s. 198 (1) embrace an "occupancy-tenant" and his "sub-tenant."

It is consistent with this view that the provision in s. 198 (2) would be superfluous in the cases of an occupancy tenant and his sub-tenant as there is no right to go to the Civil Court which could be saved from being affected, though this consideration would not, of course, suffice by itself to show that sub-s. (1) could not apply to an "occupancy tenant" and his "sub-tenant" as it would still be applicable to other cases.

I turn now to the second portion of the argument for the defendant. Assuming, contrary to the view I have expressed, that s. 198 (1) does apply to the case of an occupancy tenant and his sub-tenant, it is then urged that a question of proprietary title is in issue because cases within s. 198 are described in the heading preceding s. 193, as the argument would interpret the heading, as involving questions of proprietary title.

I have expressed above the view that a case like the present does not come within s. 198 (1) but the reasons I have given do not apply to exclude such cases as Har Prasad v. Tajammul Hussain (1) where the plaintiff claimed to be proprietor and would come within even the restricted scope of the term "land-holder." But in that case Banerji and Tudball, JJ., proceeded to hold that the heading was conclusive proof, and it has been argued here that it is conclusive, that a question of proprietary title being in issue is necessarily involved in any case which comes within s. 198 (1).

A heading of this nature is no doubt meant to express the intention of the Legislature, though it is at least open to question whether the words themselves have any operative effect. But I would not rule out the contention of the applicant on the ground that such a heading has no operative effect. I prefer to consider whether the words do bear the meaning attributed to them in Har Prasad v. Tajammul Hussain (1) and in argument here. To my mind they do not.

The heading does not say anything equivalent to "the following are cases where questions of proprietary title are in issue and such questions shall be heard by the Revenue Court in the following manner." The heading is only equivalent to "let us consider the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court in certain cases and how far it is to proceed in the direction of dealing with proprietary title." The heading is not necessarily inappropriate to a case in which proprietary title is not in issue but is merely in the background. Further, the directions which follow such a heading as we have here might, consistently with the grammatical implications in that heading, be directions to the Revenue Court to deal with the question of proprietary title or directions not to deal with it. We have, then, next to consider the terms of s. 198 to see which of these two courses the Legislature has adopted in s. 198.

Section 198 states a particular case where a defendant pleads that he "in good faith pays the rent of his holding to some third person," and that is the only plea which can bring the case within s. 198.

The section next says that the question of such payment, the question whether he actually in good faith pays the rent to a third person, is to be inquired into, and if decided in his favour, the suit is to be dismissed. It does not say that the proprietary title of the Receiver of the rent to receive the rent is to be enquired into; it expressly refrains from saying that.

Finally, sub-s. (2) declares that the decision of such question, i. e., as to the fact of actual payment in good faith shall not affect the right of any person claiming to be entitled to the rent to sue in the Civil Court to establish his title. The sub-section does not, of course, create any new right to sue in the Civil Court but merely makes clear that any existing right is not affected by the decision, i. e., any person, including the third person who has been alleged to be receiving the rent, may, if he claims to be proprietor and his title is in peril, sue in the Civil Court to establish his title. Every line of the section is consistent with and suggests the view that in a case coming within the section the Court is to deal with the factum of payments of rent in good faith to a third person and not to deal with the title of the third person to receive the rent.

That this view of the actual effect of sub-section (1) of s. 193 is in accord with the intention of the Legislature is supported by a reference to the history of the section. The earlier s. 148 of Act XII of 1881 provided expressly for the third person being made a party to the suit. The present s. 198 omits that provision and the omission directly suggests that his title to the rent is not to be inquired into and this is in accord with the omission to provide for any enquiry into his title and, so far as s. 198 (1) is concerned, the express limitation of the enquiry to the single question whether any payment has been made in fact and in good faith.

I am, therefore, of opinion that there is nothing in the heading preceding s. 198 or in s. 198 (1) to indicate that in a case coming within s. 198 (1) a question of a proprietary title is necessarily in issue. Rather are all the indications to the contrary. The answer to the question whether a matter of proprietary title is in issue cannot be based on any conclusion that the case is or is not within s. 198 but must be answered independently of s. 198.

I have already stated my view that, independently of s. 198, no question of proprietary title is in issue in the present case, at any rate where there is no contention between the parties as to who is proprietor. As to the cases Har Prasad v. Tajammul Hussain (1) and Tulhi v. Ramraj (10) my view that s. 198 and the heading to that section have no bearing on the question whether a matter of proprietary title is in issue involved my holding that in so far as those cases were based on the heading to s. 198 those decisions cannot be supported. Whether they could be effectively distinguished from the present case on the ground that in them there was at any rate in the background difference between the plaintiff's allegation and the defendant's allegation as to who was proprietor, and whether cases could be distinguished in which the person alleged by the defendant to be proprietor was made a party are questions answers to which are not necessary to the decision of the present case and into which I ought not, therefore, to enter.

I would note that I have not omitted to give the best consideration in my power to a number of other decisions of this Court and of the Board of Revenue and I am not unaware that there is a conflict of views to be found in those cases, and that the view which I have expressed could not always be reconciled with one or other of those cases. But, if I may say so, I have found little more than dicta in those cases to guide me and as the facts were not always the same I have not referred to them. Even in the case of Niranjan v. Gajadhar (3) there is nothing more than a dictum.

The above considerations lead me to the following conclusion:—that, even supposing the present case to come within s. 198 (1), the heading to s. 198 does not involve the conclusion that there is necessarily a matter of proprietary title in issue in the Revenue Court when it has before it a case within s. 198; that where the plea of the defendant literally or, in effect comes within s. 198 (1), the Revenue Court must inquire into that plea, i. e., into the allegation of actual payments in good faith to a third person and determine the question, but should not decide the question of the title of the alleged third person to receive the rent and has no concern with such title beyond such bearing as it may have on the determination of the good faith of the payments; that actually the present case does not come within s. 198 and the answer to the question whether a matter of proprietary title is in issue must be sought aliunde, that no question of proprietary title is in issue in the present case; and that appeal lies to the appropriate Revenue Court,

And my answer to the reference is that the defence set up does not come, as the Collector thinks it does, under s. 198; and secondly, that, if it does so come, there is still no question of proprietary title in issue and the case of Har Prasad v. Tajammul Hussain (1) and Tulhi v. Ramraj (10) in so far as they decided that in all cases coming within s. 198 a question of proprietary title is in issue were wrongly decided; and that the appeal was properly filed in the Court of the Collector

By the Court.—Our answer to the Reference is that the appeal lay to the Revenue Court and was properly filed in the Court of the Collector of Basti. We make no order as to costs of this Reference.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendants against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Chotzner.

It is necessary for me to state certain facts. The appellants were in occupation of one room on the ground floor of premises No. 1, Hastings Street, as monthly tenants from the end of 1911 or the beginning of 1912. The rental was Rs. 150 per month. That rental remained the same until the year 1919. In 1911 the landlords were the Mullicks. In 1919 Messrs. Solomon & Co., took a lease from the Mullicks of the premises No 1, Hastings Street, for a term of 20 years. The appellants continued to be tenants under Messrs. Solomon & Co.

On the 5th of September 1919, an agreement was made between the appellants and Messrs. Solomon & Co., to pay Rs 500 rent per month; there were negotiations for a lease, which were never brought to completion. In December of the same year the plaintiff, Kessoram Poddar, bought the lease from Messrs. Solomon & Co., and the premises from Messrs. Mullicks for a total of 11 lacs, paying 2 lacs for the lease and 9 lacs for the premises.

The plaintiff accepted the appellants as monthly tenants at the same rate of rent, namely, Rs 500. The appellants paid the rent at the rate of Rs. 500 up to the end of April 1920. On the 5th of May 1920, the Calcutta Rent Act came into operation. In June the plaintiff demanded the rent for May the appellants then said that they were liable to pay standard rent only, which was the rent payable on the first of November 1918, plus ten per cent, namely, Rs. 165.

Apparently, no reply was sent to that statement; and, on the 21st of July 1920, the appellants tendered the rent based upon the rate of Rs. 500 up to the 5th of May, when the Rent Act came into force, and at the rate of Rs. 165, which the appellants declared to be the standard rent, for the subsequent period. This was refused and on the 23rd of July 1920, the amount was paid to the Rent Controller, and after that date the appellants continued to pay what, they contended, was the standard rent to the Rent Controller.

The plaintiff gave notice to the appellants that he was intending to pull down and rebuild the premises, and he gave them notice to vacate the premises: no action was taken on the first notice and apparently the plaintiff abandoned his intention to rebuild the premises, when he failed to get possession from the appellants and entered into an agreement to sell the premises to the Imperial Bank. That purchase was completed subsequently, viz., on the 7th of December 1921.

The plaintiff, on the 29th of December 1920, gave notice to the defendants to vacate the premises at the end of January 1921. That is the notice to quit, upon which reliance is placed in this suit.

This suit was brought on the 10th of January 1922, and the claim was for rent from and including May 1920 to the end of January 1921 at the rate of Rs. 500 per month, and for damages for wrongful use and occupation of the premises from the 1st of February 1921 up to the 7th of December 1921, which, as I have said, was the date on which the plaintiff sold the premises to the Imperial Bank and after which he had no interest in the premises.

The first point, which was urged by the learned Advocate on behalf of the appellants, was that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover rent in respect of the first period, namely, from 5th May 1920 to January 1921, both months inclusive, at a rate higher than the standard rent in respect of these premises.

The learned Judge rejected that contention on the ground that the standard rent had not been fixed by the Rent Controller, and that there was a fallacy underlying the argument, because it proceeded upon the assumption that a tenant could standardize his own rent. The learned Judge held that the appellants ought to have applied to the Rent Controller for the standardisation of the rent and as they did not do so, they could not be heard in this suit to allege that they were not liable for more than the standard rent.

The question is whether the conclusion, at which the learned Judge arrived, is correct.

I am not surprised at the conclusion at which the learned Judge arrived, because it has been pointed out on many occasions that the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act are difficult to construe. With great respect, however, to the learned Judge I am unable to agree with the conclusion at which he arrived.

The question depends upon certain sections of the Rent Act.

Section 2 (f) provides that "standard rent" in relation to any premises means, "(i) the rent at which the premises were let on the first day of November, 1918, or, where they were not let on that date, the rent at which they were last let before that date and after the first day of November, 1915, with the addition, in either case of ten per cent. on such rent [I need not read No. (ii) in connection with this case inasmuch as the premises in question were let on the 1st of November 1918];

"(iii) in the cases, specified in s. 15, the rent fixed by the Controller."

The word "or" does not appear between these sub-sections, but I think that it must have been intended that the sub-sections or clauses should be read disjunctively. Consequently "standard rent" may be as described in (i), (ii) or (iii) in s. 2, cl. (f).

The learned Advocate who appeared for the appellants submitted that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the tenant had standardised his own rent. He argued that the rent was standardised by the Act and he pointed out that the first sub-clause of sub-s. (f), if it stood alone, would clearly indicate that the standard rent was the rent at which the premises were let on the 1st of November 1918 with the addition of ten per cent. on such rent.

But the learned Advocate who appeared for the plaintiff argued that the first sub-section of cl. (f) does not stand alone and sub-s. (iii) must be considered.

Now, turning to s. 15, which is the section mentioned in sub-s. (iii), s. 2, cl. (f) it is found that "the Controller shall, on an application made to him by any landlord or tenant, grant a certificate certifying the standard rent of any premises leased or rented by such landlord or tenant, as the case may be," and that "in any of the following cases, the Controller may fix the standard rent at such amount as, having regard to the provisions of this Act and the circumstances of the case he deems just.

Sub-s. (d) is one of the following cases and refers to the case "where the rent paid on the first day of November, 1918 (or, where the premises were not let on that date, the rent at which the premises were last let before that date) was in the opinion of the Controller unduly low."

Section 15, therefore, gives the landlord an opportunity of applying to the Controller and alleging that the rent paid in respect of these premises on the 1st of November 1918 was unduly low, and if he can prove that, it will be in the discretion of the Controller to fix the standard rent at an amount higher than the rent which was actually paid on the 1st of November 1918, subject to the proviso contained in the section that he cannot fix it at a higher amount than the highest rent actually paid for the premises at any time since the first day of November 1913. In this case the highest rent paid for the premises since the first day of November 1918 was Rs. 500 per month, so that if the landlord had applied to the Controller and alleged that the rent which had been paid in November 1918 was unduly low, the Controller might have fixed it at a higher amount. If he had been satisfied that the rent in November 1918 was unduly low, the Controller might have fixed it at a higher amount, but he could not fix it at a higher amount than Rs. 500 per month.

Consequently, the learned Advocate for the plaintiff-respondent argued that on the 1st November 1918 rent plus ten per cent. should not be adopted as the standard rent in this case, because the Controller might upon an application by the landlord have fixed a higher rent.

In my opinion, that view ought not to be accepted. I think it was intended by the Act that prima facie the standard rent which was mentioned in sub-s. (i) of cl. (f) of s. 2 should be the standard rent, and in the absence of any application by the landlord to fix it at a higher rate, under s. 15, the "standard rent" should be taken to be the rent at which the premises were let on the 1st of November 1918 with the addition of ten per cent. as provided by sub-s. (i).

It was not necessary, in my opinion, for the defendants in this case to show that they had made an application to the Controller and that he had fixed the standard rent at Rs. 165 before taking the point in this suit. In other words, in my opinion, it was open to the defendants-appellants to urge and rely upon the fact that the standard rent as fixed by the Act was Rs. 165 per month. Consequently, in my judgment, by reason of the provisions of s. 4 of the Act, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any amount which exceeded the standard rent for the period from May 1920 to January 1921.

The result, therefore, is that, in my judgment, that part of the decree of the learned Judge which deals with the amount of rent recoverable should be varied.

I understand that the standard rent had been deposited with the Controller and has in fact been withdrawn by the plaintiff.

The remainder of the case relates to the question whether the notice in December 1920 was a valid notice. That depends upon the construction to be placed upon s. 11, sub-s. (5). That sub-section provides: "No tenant shall be entitled to the benefit of this section in respect of any premises, unless within three months of the date of the commencement of this Act he has paid all arrears of rent due by him in respect of the said premises, and also unless he pays the rent due by him to the full extent allowable by this Act within the time fixed in the contract with his landlord, or, in the absence of any such contract, by the fifteenth day of the month next following that for which the rent is payable".

It is to be noticed that this section deals with the granting of an order or a decree for recovery of possession only.

The point arises in this way: As I have already mentioned, the amount of the standard rent for May and June was not tendered to the landlord until the 21st July 1920 and was not paid to the Rent Controller until the 23rd of July 1920, and it is not denied that that was not paid within the time specified by the Act. But the learned Advocate for the appellants presented an ingenious argument based upon sub-s. (5) of s. 11 which was to this effect. He argued that sub-s. (5) was intended to give a tenant three months within which he might pay the arrears of rent, and that such arrears would include not only any arrears of rent, which might be due at the time the Act came into force, but also any arrears of standard rent which might become due after the Act came into force.

In my judgment this argument ought not to be accepted. Having regard to the words used in the sub-section and to the framing of the sub-section, I think it is clear that the intention was to give the tenant the benefit of the section, if he complied with two conditions: in the first place he must have paid any arrears of rent which might be due at the time of the passing of the Act within three months of the commencement of the Act; and, secondly, he must pay the rent to the full extent allowable by the Act within the time fixed by the contract with his landlord and in the absence of any such contract by the 15th day of the month next following that for which the rent is payable.

In this case the appellants did not pay the rent within the time fixed in the contract or by the 15th day of the month, which followed the months of May and June for which the rent was payable: and, consequently, in my opinion, the appellants were in default.

It is true that the plaintiff did not act upon the default until the end of the year; but he was within his rights in giving the notice in December 1920 which expired at the end of January 1921.

Consequently, after January 1921 the appellants were trespassers and were no longer tenants, and they are liable to the plaintiff for compensation for the wrongful use and occupation of the premises from the 1st of February 1921 to the 7th of December 1921.

The learned Judge awarded compensation at the rate of Rs. 500 per month. He based his judgment to a large extent upon the evidence given by Mr. Shroobree.

It was argued on behalf of the appellants that the plaintiff's case was that he wanted the premises in order that he might pull them down and re-build; that he abandoned that intention of his own accord and sold the premises; that although he alleged that he had suffered loss; he gave no proof of the alleged loss and, therefore, that the most the plaintiff could recover would be such rent as the plaintiff could have recovered from a tenant during those months; that having regard to the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act the plaintiff could not have recovered from any tenant more than the standard rent in respect of the premises and that as the appellants had in fact paid to the Controller the standard rent for this period and the plaintiff had received the same, the plaintiff was not entitled to any damages at all.

On the other hand, it was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the learned Judge was right in awarding damages at the rate of Rs. 500 per month.

I agree with the learned Judge's decision as to the amount of the damages although I base my judgment on grounds somewhat different to those stated by the learned Judge.

The plaintiff can only recover such damages as flow naturally from the breach of duty or breach of contract in the ordinary and usual course of things.

The evidence was that the appellants had willingly agreed to pay Rs. 500 a month for the premises in 1919. Further they desired to take a lease for three years at the rate of Rs. 500 per month. The evidence further shows that the appellants tried to find other premises but they could not get any other suitable premises at a lower rent than Rs. 500 a month.

Now, after January 1921, as I have already said, they were no longer tenants and they were not in a position to take advantage of the Calcutta Rent Act—they were wrongdoers.

In these circumstances it is not unreasonable to hold that Rs. 500 a month was fair compensation for the use and occupation of the premises by the defendants after January 1921.

It was not for the plaintiff to prove what would have been the standard rent if an application had been made to the Controller.

The premises are in an important quarter of the town and the defendants, before the Rent Act came into operation, were willing to pay Rs. 500 per month. Prima facie, therefore, it is not open to the defendants to allege that such amount was not a fair rent for a tenant to pay. If an application had been made to the Rent Controller he might have fixed the standard rent at less than Rs. 500 per month. On the other hand, he might have fixed it at Rs. 500 a month.

No application was made and that question was never decided.

It has, therefore, not been proved what the standard rent would have been if the matter had come before the Controller.

In the absence of any such decision and upon the evidence in the case, I am not satisfied that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the damages for the wrongful use and occupation of the premises by the defendants should be assessed on the basis of Rs. 500 a month.

The result is that the sum of Rs. 4,500 decreed as rent will be reduced to Rs. 1,485 making the total amount of the decree Rs. 6,601-10-6.

As regards costs, we are of opinion that the appellants should have the general costs of the appeal and the costs of one day's hearing. We do not interfere with the order of the learned Judge as regards costs.

The money received from the Rent Controller by the respondents will be taken as part satisfaction of the decree and satisfaction will be entered to that extent.

Buckland, J. -I will first deal with the point whether the notice to quit was a valid notice. For this purpose, though I shall give my reasons later, I may say at once that, in my opinion, the amount of rent which the appellant Company had to pay was the amount which they actually deposited with the Rent Controller month by month and it is on this basis that I will deal with the question as to the notice to quit. The appellant Company, therefore, were entitled to the benefit of s. 11 of the Act provided they paid that amount either to the landlord by the fifteenth day of the month next following that for which it was payable, or, if refused by the landlord, deposited it with the Rent Controller under sub s. (4). The difficulty in which the appellant Company find themselves is that as regards the rent for May 1920 they deposited it out of time and by reason of that they are precluded from claiming the benefit of the section.

The argument that the "arrears" referred to in sub-s. (5) includes rent in arrear during the first three months after the Act came into force, and payable in respect of those months leads to the difficulty that in regard to those three months, if that construction were adopted, there would be two inconsistent provisions as to the payment of rent, namely, that provided in the first part of sub s. (5) that the tenant shall have three months within which to pay such rent and that provided by the latter part that he must pay or deposit his rent month by month.

The correct construction of this sub-section, in my opinion, is that the "arrears" referred to are arrears due at the time when the Act comes into force and that the first part has nothing to do with rent which accrues due month by month after that date.

The next question is as to the amount of rent to which the plaintiff was entitled for the period between the 1st of May 1920 and the 31st of January 1921. This involves consideration of various sections of the Calcutta Rent Act, an Act of faulty construction which renders it difficult of interpretation.

The contention of the plaintiff, stated briefly, is that unless the standard rent has been fixed by the Controller the tenant is not entitled to take advantage of the provisions of the Act, for, in fact no rent has been fixed by the Controller as standard rent of the premises in suit.

For the defendant Company, on the other hand, it has been argued that, though not necessarily in all cases but probably in the majority of cases and certainly in this case, there is a standard rent which, so to speak, attached to property from the moment that the Calcutta Rent Act came into force irrespective of any application made to or order passed by the Rent Controller under the Act, and that, subject to what I shall have to say presently, that is the amount which the tenant must pay or deposit.

"Standard rent" is defined in s. 2 (f) as the rent at which the premises were let on the first day of November 1918, or, where they were not let on that date, the rent at which they were last let between the first day of November 1915 and the first day of November 1918, plus ten per cent. on such rent in either case.

The sub-section furnishes two more definitions of which the second may be ignored. It has no application to the present case.

The third definition involves reference to s. 15 and provides that in the cases specified in s. 15 the "standard rent" is the rent fixed by the Controller. Now, in order to ascertain what those cases are, for it is in those cases alone that rent fixed by the Controller is "standard rent" according to the definition, one must look at s. 15 (3). The first two sub-sections have nothing to do with this matter, sub-s. (3) is sub-divided into five cases each involving different sets of circumstances, none of which has any application to the present case. If it had been intended that standard rent should only be such rent as the Rent Controller has fixed, and that in the circumstances contemplated by s. 2 (f) (i) all that the Rent Controller would have to do would be to ascertain the rent on the date material thereunder and add ten per cent., it would have been more correct to have included such a case among the cases under s. 15 (3) and eliminated s. 2 (f) (i) altogether. But, inasmuch as the case with which we have to deal is not one of those mentioned in s. 15 (3) and consequently is not one in which the Rent Controller may fix the standard rent thereunder, it follows that under the definition clause the action of the Rent Controller in fixing the standard rent should be excluded.

I do not, however, altogether exclude the operation of s. 15 (1) under which the Controller may certify the standard rent, though he fixes it in appropriate cases under s. 15 (3). It may be that in a case to which s. 2 (f) (i) applies it is open to a party to apply to the Controller for a certificate. This point does not arise in this case but I mention it lest the juxtaposition of these two sub-sections should lead to the suggestion that in a case to which s. 2 (f) (i) applies it is the duty of the party interested in having it done to make an application to the Rent Controller under s. 15 (1), even if s. 15 (3) has no application.

In my opinion, the contention of learned Counsel for the appellant Company is the correct one and where the conditions contemplated by sub-s. 2 (f) (i) exist, the standard rent follows as a matter of course, subject, however, to this that it is always open to a landlord or a tenant to make an application to the Rent Controller under s. 15 (3) if he can bring the matter within its several provisions. Upon the Rent Controller so fixing the rent then there is another standard rent for the premises as defined by the Act. This leads to the curious result that there may be a standard rent as defined by s. 2 (f) (i) and a standard rent as defined by s. 2 (f) (iii), both simultaneously applicable to the same premises. There is, however, no practical difficulty because when you come to apply other provisions of the Act and, in particular, s. 4 (1) or s. 11 (5), the landlord would be entitled to the benefit of whichever standard rent might be the higher. In this view, the amount which the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant Company was the amount for which the premises were let on the 1st of November 1918 plus ten per cent. There is no question as to what that amount was and, in my opinion, the judgment and decree of the learned Judge should to this extent be modified.

The learned Judge has relied upon an earlier judgment of mine in Jetha Bhulchand v. Grace (1). That is not an authority for the proposition that if standard rent has not been fixed by the Controller, the tenant must pay the agreed rent to the landlord or deposit it with the Controller. In that case according to my recollection, which the report confirms, there was no competition as between the standard rent and the agreed rent. The only question was whether the tenant had paid or deposited his rent in time. I am not sure that the learned Judge referred to the case on the question of amount, but without explanation it might be so interpreted and deemed to conflict with the opinion now expressed.

The last question is that of damages. I agree with the opinion expressed by the learned Chief Justice and have nothing to add.

I concur in the order to be made.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. X, r. 1—Examination of parties—Replication covering all facts in written statement—Witnesses, order in which to lead—Court, duty of.

The Court is bound to examine the parties only when there is no clear express or implied denial of any statement of fact in the pleadings. But where a plaintiff puts in a written replication which covers all statements of fact referred to in the written statement, there is no occasion for the Court to examine the parties or their Pleaders.

It is no duty of the Court to direct a party as to the order in which he is to lead his witnesses.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 8th April 1925, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Ambala, dated the 20th June 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Pandit Bishan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge remanded this case on the grounds set out in para. 2 of his judgment. The first ground mentioned there is that the lower Court omitted to comply with the provisions of O. X, r. 1. Now, O. X, r. 1 only makes it obligatory on the Court to examine the parties where there is no clear express or implied denial of any statement of fact in the pleadings. In this case the plaintiff had put in a written replication which, as far as I can see, covered all statements of fact referred to in the written statement. There was, therefore, no occasion for the Court to examine the parties of their Pleader.

The next ground taken is that the Court omitted to comply with para. 75 of the Rules and Orders of the High Court, Vol. I. This omission was not made the subject of any ground of appeal before the District Judge and I do not see that it was necessary to remand the case for this purpose in the circumstances of this case.

The third point taken was that the defendants had stated that they proposed to prove issue No. 2, the onus of which was on them, by the evidence of one witness the evidence of the plaintiff and the evidence of one of the defendants. The defendants examined the plaintiff before putting one of themselves into the witness-box, and, on an objection taken by the plaintiff, the lower Court disallowed the statement of the defendant on the ground that the defendants should, if they wished to take a statement of the defendant, have taken it before the statement of the plaintiff was recorded. The learned District Judge seems to have been of opinion that, as the defendant had announced his intention of summoning himself as a witness, it was the duty of the Trial Court to have warned him to take the statement of the plaintiff last. I do not see that it was the duty of the Court to direct the party as to the order in which he was to lead his witnesses. The Court might well have done so but I cannot see that this is a ground for remand because the defendants were the persons primarily responsible for the order in which their evidence was to be recorded.

The next ground taken is that the Court disallowed a certain statement of accounts from being put in in order to contradict the plaintiff as a witness. The Court perhaps was strictly speaking within its rights in disallowing this document which should have been put in earlier in the course of the proceedings.

However as the statement of accounts had been sent by plaintiff himself to the defendants I think, in the circumstance of the case, the Court might well have exercised its discretion in favour of the defendants. Mr. Shamair Chand for the appellant has not pressed the matter before me. He has, however, pointed out that it is unnecessary to remand the whole case for re-decision and that it is sufficient to allow the document to be put in now and the plaintiff further examined, if necessary.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and set aside the order remanding the case for re-decision and re-trial, but I direct that the learned District Judge may either allow the plaintiff to be further examined before himself with reference to the statement of accounts which was disallowed in the Court below or may direct the lower Court to examine the plaintiff further with references to the statement of accounts and submit a report to himself as to the result of the examination together with a decision, if necessary, on issue No. 2. This order will meet the ends of justice in this case. For the rest the learned District Judge will dispose of the appeal according to law.

Where a Railway receipt for goods consigned is granted in the name of a servant or agent, the real owner of the goods is entitled to sue directly the Railway Company for their value if the goods are lost.

Sealing a wagon with paper only constitutes wilful negligence, and the Railway Company can be successfully sued for damages if the goods are lost in transit.

Mr. S. C. Das, for Mr. K. N. Laghate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision application against a Small Cause Court decree awarding compensation for two bags of sugar forming two complete packages out of a larger consignment which were lost in transit. The lower Court has held that there was wilful negligence on the part of the Railway. The grounds taken in revision are two :—

(1) That the plaintiff-firm was not entitled to sue because the Railway receipt was granted in the name of its agents.

(2) That the Court below was wrong in holding that sealing a wagon with paper only constitutes wilful negligence.

On the first point even if the name of the principal was not disclosed he is entitled under s. 231 of the Contract Act to sue on the contract. I know of no authority for the proposition that where a Railway receipt is granted in the name of a servant or agent the real owner of the goods cannot claim for their value if lost. On the second point the judgment of the Court below is supported by the ruling in Firm Balram Dass-Fakir Chand v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1) which I am unable to distinguish from the facts of the present case. The revision accordingly fails and I dismiss it with costs.

PETITIONER

E. S. LUARD—RESPONDENT.

Patents and Designs Act (II of 1911), s. 26—Utility and novelty, meaning of—Patent for making in one piece

In Patent Law the term 'utility' is not used in the abstract but in a very special sense. It may be described as an invention better than the preceding knowledge of the trade as to a particular article. Mere usefulness is not sufficient to support a patent. [p. 1009, col 2.]

For purposes of novelty in Patent Law it is not enough that the purpose is new or that there is novelty in the application so that the article produced is in that sense new, but there must be some novelty in the mode of application. In adopting the old contrivance to the new purpose there must be difficulties to overcome requiring what is called invention or there must be some ingenuity in the mode of making adoption. To be new the novelty must show invention. [p. 1009, col 2; p. 1010, col. 1.]

Patents for making in one piece, articles previously made in two or more pieces have generally been held invalid. [p. 1010, col. 1.]

Mr. P. N. Chatterjee (with him Mr. C. Bagram), for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee (with him Mr. A. K. Roy), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition under s. 26 of the Patents and Designs Act (II of 1911) for the revocation of a patent granted to the respondent on the 21st March 1922, by the Controller of Patents and Designs, Calcutta. At the request of the parties this case has been tried with the aid of an Assessor, Mr. A. H. Thackwell, Works Manager, East Indian Railways, Carriage and Wagon Workshops, Lilloah, and I desire to acknowledge his assistance to me. The petitioner is the Vacuum Brake Co., Ltd., who carry on business in the manufacture and sale of Vacuum Brake fittings for Railway locomotives and rolling stock. The respondent is an Engineer and is a Director of the Consolidated Brake and Engineering Co., Ltd., manufacturers of Vacuum Brakes. The petitioner for many years, in the business of the Company, imported from the factory in England and sold in British India, Vacuum Brake Cylinders described as having the valve chamber mounted in the inner side of the piston according to 2 designs No. 14153, dated 2nd November 1909 and No. 14678, dated 23rd April 1910. These designs were published and have been publicly known in British India since 1910. The petitioner also claims to be the assignee of a patent known as "Hardy's Patent" being British Letters Patent No. 5864 of 1905. This also was publicly known, and published in India, and Vacuum Brake Cylinders according to that patent have been publicly used in India.

On the 21st February 1922, the respondent applied for and obtained in England a patent relating to the pistons of Vacuum Brake Cylinders identical with the one in the present suit. That patent was No. 5099 of 1922. On appeal, however, by the present petitioner, the patent No. 5099 was cancelled on the 31st July 1924 by the Solicitor General who held the view that it disclosed no invention. In the meanwhile, on the 21st March 1922, the respondent had applied in Calcutta to the Controller of Patents for a patent of the same device. The application was opposed by the petitioner, but it was accepted on the 11th June 1922, and Patent No. 8018, dated 21st March 1922, the subject-matter of the present suit, was granted. On the 10th December 1923, the respondent applied to the Patent Office in Calcutta for an amendment of his Specification No. 8018 of 21st March 1922. The amendments asked for were allowed subject to the insertion to a disclaimer in the Specification relating to British Specification No. 5864 of 1905, and in consequence of this, the present proceedings were instituted for a revocation of the patent.

The Specification relating to Hardy's patent is marked as Ex. A in this case, and the drawings show some examples of forms of construction of the invention. Specimens of the petitioner's design No. 14153 of 1909 and No. 14678 of 1910 are marked C and D respectively. The only difference between these two lies in the method of attachment to the vertical wall of the piston. The respondent's Specification No. 8018 accompanied with the drawings is marked F-I. I think there can be no doubt that both in the working principle, and general character of construction, the petitioner's designs and the respondent's patent are founded on Hardy's patent. It is material in the present case to observe that the ball valve in this patent of 1905 is attached to the inner wall of the piston, and figure 2 shows a removeable seating at the bottom of the valve. If the nuts are removed from the bolts, the ball seat below and the ball come away. The ball can be let in either from above or below, and in the type shown in figure 4, from the side. In the respondent's patent the ball valve, as it is in Hardy's patent, is attached to the piston wall inside the cylinder. The valve consists of the body with the screw plug underneath, and the ball inside the body rests on the plug which is put in position from below, and which is removeable by unscrewing it; so both in Hardy's patent and in the petitioner's design the ball rests on a removeable seating. Exhibit E a model which has been used in this case to show the general character of the construction and principle of the respondent's ball valve. It is not an exact model, but it shows the principle. Later, during the case, a specimen of the respondent's ball valve, in section, was secured by Mr. Thackwell, the Assessor, and at the request of the respondent's Counsel it was marked as Ex. I. The petitioner's designs C and D as already stated are identical. Type C is attached to the inner wall of the piston by 2 studs and nuts, and type D is attached to the inner wall of the piston by the valve being screwed in. The ball valve consists of the valve body, the ball seating which is screwed in, the ball which is contained in a smaller cage, and a screw plug which closes the top of the body. It has been proved, and it is not disputed, that the petitioner's ball valve type Ex. D has been in use on Indian Railways many years, and long prior to the grant of Patent No. 8018 to the respondent, and the present application for a revocation of that patent is made on the ground that it is of no utility and that it is not a new invention, within the meaning of the patent law. The patent is also attacked on the ground that it was anticipated by Hardy's patent. It is important, therefore, to see the interpretation placed by the Courts on the terms "utility," "novelty," and "invention." The cases show that in patent law the term "utility" is used, not in the abstract, but in a very special sense. Mere usefulness is not sufficient to support a patent. In the case of Young and Neilson v. Rosenthal & Co. (1) Grove, J., in charging the Jury described "utility" as meaning an invention better than the preceeding knowledge of the trade as to a particular article. As to the meaning of "novelty" and "invention," Lord Westbury, in the case of Harwood v. Great Northern Railway Co. (2), said "you cannot have a patent for a well-known mechanical contrivance merely when it is applied in a manner or to a purpose, which is not quite the same, but is analogous to the manner or the purpose in or to which it has been hitherto notoriously used." In citing this rule in Rickmann v. Thierry (3) Lord Davey said "It is not enough that the purpose is new or that there is novelty in the application, so that the article produced is in that sense new, but there must be some novelty in the mode of application. By that I understand, that in adopting the old contrivance to the new purpose, there must be difficulties to be overcome, requiring what is called invention, or there must be some ingenuity in the mode of making the adoption" and Cotton, L. J., in Blakey v. Latham (4) laid down that to be new in the patent sense, the novelty must show invention; see also Fletcher Moulton on Patents, page 21.

Three witnesses have been called on behalf of the parties. Mr. Cook, a District Carriage and Wagon Superintendent on the Bengal Nagpur Railway, and Mr. Remfry an Engineer and Patent Agent on behalf of the petitioner, and Mr. Bwyne an Engineer in the employment of the Consolidated Brake and Engineering Co., Ltd. on behalf of the respondent. Mr. Luard is a Director of this Company and was the Managing Director when Mr. Bwyne came out to India in 1923. The evidence of Mr. Cook and Mr. Remfry, generally, speaking is to the effect that they cannot find anything new in the respondent's ball valve or any improvement on that of the petitioner's. It is common ground that the principle is the same, and the valves function exactly alike. Mr. Bwyne says that the essential difference between the two is the simplicity of the respondent's ball valve which has fewer parts, the ball seat being combined with the plug. I do not think that this in itself is enough to support a patent. Many cases are collected in Fletcher Moulton on Patents, page 39 where it is stated that patents for making in one piece, articles, previously made in two or more pieces, have generally been held invalid. I have been unable to see what advantage results from this and I cannot regard it as an invention. Mr. Luard, in an affidavit that has been referred to, says, in para. 4 that his patent differs from the petitioner's designs in two features which are claimed by him to be of great value. One of these features is that the valve seat can be removed without first removing that ball, and that upon removing the valve seat for the purpose of inspection, cleaning or removal, the ball is simultaneously removed. The first part of this statement suggests that the ball can be left in the valve chamber after the valve seat has been removed. As a matter of fact it cannot.

As soon as the ball seat is removed, the ball falls out, and the latter portion of Mr. Luard's statement shows that this is so. In my opinion there is no substance in the point made. For the purpose of inspecting or cleaning the valve seat, in Mr. Luard's design, the screw plug underneath is removed and the ball falls out; and in the petitioner's construction the screw plug at the top is removed and the small cage containing the ball is taken out. Even for the purposes of grinding the valve seat, which is done according to Mr. Cook about once in five years, and according to Mr. Bwyne about once every year, it is not necessary for the valve seat in the petitioner's construction to be taken out. The overhauling of the ball valve is so occasional, that if Mr. Luard's design showed any greater convenience, which I have been unable to find, it would not be one of value. The other feature claimed to be valuable is that the ball is properly located within the valve chamber without the provision of a cage which Mr. Luard says may possibly be omitted when re-placing the parts. As there is no greater likelihood of the cage not being re-placed than there is of the ball not being re-placed in the chamber in Mr. Luard's construction, there is no substance in the advantage he claims inferentially for his own design. Mr. Luard is mistaken if he suggests that the cage is necessary to keep the ball in position. The evidence of Mr. Cook and Mr. Remfry shows that the absence of the cage would make no difference to the working of the valve, for the ball must come into position as soon as the screw plug at the top is screwed down properly. The cage is merely a convenient receptacle for the ball, which is taken out simply by lifting out the cage. In this connection, Mr. Luard has made a statement in his amended specification to which exception has, and I think justly, been taken. Referring to the petitioner's construction Mr. Luard says "in removing the screw plug the ball must be removed with some difficulty." If Mr. Luard had seen a specimen of the petitioner's ball valve, it should have been patent to him that the ball comes away in the cage, and that his statement was misleading. With reference then to the special features in patent No. 8018 mentioned by Mr. Luard, I am unable, for the reasons I have given, to take his view of their value. From the point of view of convenience, it has been said on behalf of the petitioner that it is much easier to get at the screw plug when placed at the top of the ball valve, as in the petitioner's designs, than when it is placed underneath, and is practically unseen, as in patent No 8018. Both Mr. Cook and Mr. Remfry say this, but Mr. Bwyne thinks it is equally easy in either case. Such judgment as I am able to form on this particular point, does not lead me to agree with Mr. Bwyne. There is one more point in Mr. Bwyne's evidence I shall refer to before stating my conclusions in this case. Mr. Bwyne says that welding the ball valve after it has been fixed to the piston wall, eliminates a possible source of leakage of air at the place of attachment. I do not think it can be contended that there is any invention in this. Mr. Bwyne concedes there is no novelty in welding, and there can be no question that welding could be applied equally well in the case of the petitioner's ball valves if it were considered an advantage. The possible consequences, however, of fixing the ball valve in the manner described by Mr. Bwyne, preparatory to the welding have been criticised as serious. Mr. Bwyne says that the ball valve is attached to the vertical wall of the piston by drilling a hole in the piston wall to receive the turned portion of the valve, and, as the whole is drilled smaller than the turned portion of the valve, it is necessary to drive the valve into position by the use of hammer, after which the welding is done. When at the Assessor's instance he was asked what would happen if a considerable degree of force were used, he said this would not be permitted; but that if a considerable degree of force was used, there would be every likelihood of injuring the piston wall. Mr. Bwyne's evidence further shows that if for any cause it becomes necessary to remove the valve body the welding would have to be chipped away by hammer and chisel and the ball valve driven out, and the effect of his evidence is that there would be some slight damage to the inside of the piston wall, but he says that it would not be material if reasonable care were used. Mr. Remfry says that injury to the piston wall would mean injury to the piston itself. Mr. Cook was not cross-examined on this question. The evidence altogether leaves the impression on my mind that the welding process, taken as a whole, is not unattended with danger to the piston. I do not find in Mr. Luard's specification or affidavit, a claim to any speciality in the process, and it does not impress me as a valuable feature of the patent. As stated before the evidence shows, and it is not disputed, that type D of 1910 of the petitioner's designs has been in use on Indian Railways for many years prior to the grant of patent No. 8018. Mr. Cook has many years' practical experience of Vacuum Brakes and is well-acquainted with the construction and working of the petitioner's ball valve type D and he is a witness unconnected in any way with the parties. He was unable to find anything new, or, from the point of view of practical utility, anything more useful in Mr. Luard's patent. After giving my best consideration to the several matters on which evidence has been given and the question raised in this case with reference to both Mr. Luard's patent and the petitioner's design, I have come to the conclusion that in no respect is the patent No. 8018 an improvement on, or more useful or better than, the petitioner's design. In my judgment it is not, as claimed, an improved Vacuum Brake Piston and so far as I can see there is nothing new, in the sense of novelty, in the patent, and it discloses no invention. Furthermore, in my view, in material features, the patent was anticipated by Hardy's patent. Applying the principles laid down in the cases cited, I am of opinion that the patent No. 8018 of the 21st March 1922 granted to Mr. Luard the respondent with the amended specification relating thereto, ought to be revoked, and I give judgment accordingly in favour of the petitioner. The respondent must pay the petitioner's costs in these proceedings. The Taxing Officer will on taxation fix what allowance can reasonably be made to the expert witnesses in the suit, viz., Messrs. Cook, Remfry and Bwyne for qualifying themselves for the purposes of giving evidence and also for their attendance in Court; the amount to be fixed by the Taxing Officer in his discretion. Under s. 35 of the Patents and Designs Act I fix the remuneration of the Assessor at Rs. 100 per diem. This item will not be chargeable to the parties.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Salariya, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants who are jat lambardars of village Bidhlan in the Rohtak Tahsil sued four mahajans of the same village in the Revenue Courts for recovery of kurhi kamini cesses and obtained decrees. Each of these mahajans then filed a suit for declaration that he was not liable to pay kurhi kamini as he had actually purchased his houses and the sites thereunder and was not merely a cultivator or kamin to whom the sites have been given for residence. It was found by the Trial Court that such suits were cognizable by the Civil Courts and that the plaintiffs were the purchasers of their houses and were not holding the sites as kamins or cultivators. It then went on to find that the burden of proof was upon the proprietors of the village to establish that those who purchased houses were liable to pay this cess which was in the nature of a ground rent and which would thus be ordinarily recoverable from those who were given permission to occupy sites as kamins or cultivators. The lower Appellate Court also held that the suits were cognisable by the Civil Courts and that the plaintiffs were out-and-out purchasers of their houses and sites, but it held that as there was a custom of payment of kurhi kamini cesses in the village, it was incumbent upon the plaintiffs to establish that they were not liable. It accordingly remanded the suit for a re-trial on this issue after it changed the burden of issue. The Trial Court then held again that this cess was in the nature of a ground rent and that the defendants had failed to prove that they had ever realised it from the plaintiffs. It, therefore, again decreed the suits. The lower Appellate Court then accepted the appeals and dismissed the suits holding that the cess in question was in the nature of a hearth cess and not of ground rent and that it applied to all persons who were not proprietors of the village estate, that is, village agricultural land. It brushed aside the fact that the defendants had failed to prove its collection from the plaintiffs by noting that the defendants said that the accounts were kept by the village mahajans who did not produce them. Certificates were obtained from the lower Appellate Court in order to allow second appeals to be preferred to this Court and they are now before me.

In para. 248 (f) of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law kurhi kamini is defined as a house or ground rent levied from non-proprietor residents. It was held in Dewak Ram v. Kour Pirthi Singh (1) that kurhi kamini dues were of the same nature as house or ground rent. In that case there was a finding that such rent had been paid in the past by the persons who were sued. Again in Natha v. Jai Ram (2) it was held that this cess must be regarded as ground rent. The question had to be decided in order to hold as to which Court should hear the appeal. In Fallon's Dictionary kurhi is defined as a household or family or house tax while 'kamin' is described as a menial servant. The meaning of the phrase, therefore, is a house tax or rent on menial servants according to the Dictionary. It was held in Fazul v. Samundar Khan (3) that the cess called kamiana was a due customarily leviable from the kamins of the village and a suit for its recovery was cognizable by the Revenue Court. In Raj Sarup v. Hardawari (4) kurhi kamini was held to be in the nature of a hearth cess and to be the equivalent of the door cess or haqqbuha of the Western Districts. It was further held that a suit for its recovery lay in the Revenue Courts as was done in the cesses now before me. This ruling, however, makes no allusion to the earlier rulings discussed by me where it was laid down that this cess was in the nature of a house or ground rent. The Dictionary also was not consulted. In any case this ruling is an authority for the view that the suits for the recovery of this cess were properly brought in the Revenue Courts.

(3) 49 P. R. 1891.

In Sherkh Muhammad v. Habib Khan (5), however, it was held that a suit for a declaration that kamiana dues were not recoverable from such residents of a village as were owners of their houses did not come under cl. (j) of s. 77 of the Tenancy Act and was cognizable by the Civil Courts. This ruling has never been dissented from and must be followed. Though, therefore, the lambardars can sue in the Revenue Courts for the recovery of this cess the person proceeded against can bring a suit for declaration in the Civil Courts whatever the value of such declaration may be to him.

Following the earlier rulings, therefore, and the Dictionary meaning of the words I hold that kurhi kamini is a cess of the nature of a house or ground rent. This view was also accepted by Mr. Joseph, the Settlement Officer of that District, in 1910. He held that a proprietor who became an owner of a house by virtue of purchase was exempt from its payment. A different view was, however, taken by the Financial Commissioner who, following certain revenue decisions, held that it was a hearth tax. There seems to me to be no foundation on which this view can be based. In these circumstances I hold that the burden of proving that the plaintiffs are liable to pay this cess lay upon the defendants, seeing that it is admitted that the plaintiffs are out-and-out purchasers of their houses and sites inside the village. The words "kurhi kamini" cannot be taken to mean a tax designed to show the overlordship of the proprietors of the agricultural land as against all other residents in the village but only a kind of ground rent recoverable from kamins and cultivators to whom sites have been given for as long as they remain in the village.

It is true that the names of the plaintiffs' ancestors who purchased the sites and houses before 1880 are recorded in the list of kurhi kamini payers in the wajib-ul-araiz of 1880 and 1909. It was held, however, in Arur Singh v. Dal Singh (6) that such entries do not bind any one except the proprietors who are parties to them. Similarly an entry in the wajib-ul-arz was held not to be sufficient to base a claim for grazing dues in Azmut Ali Khan v. Harnam (7). It is also admitted that there is no proof in the present case that the plaintiffs ever paid the dues in question. That is very good evidence against the custom that they are liable to pay it. It was not sufficient for the defendants merely to say that the accounts were kept by the mahajans who did not produce them. Even if the accounts were written up by the mahajans which also has not been established, the book in which the entries were made would be kept by the lambardars. Besides, the usual person to keep such accounts would be the patwari. The burden, therefore, being upon the defendants to prove that the plaintiffs were liable to pay this cess, it is clear that they have failed to prove it and it was scarcely disputed that this would be so if the burden of proof was upon the defendants. I hold that no custom has been established to the effect that the plaintiffs are liable to pay the cess in question and accepting the appeals I decree the plaintiffs' suits with costs in this Court.

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. S. C. Goyle, for the Applicants.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against an order of a Bench of this Court passed in its revisional jurisdiction. It appears that in the Court of first instance a suit was brought against one Manohar Singh. The 17th of November 1923 was fixed for the settlement of issues. Before that date Manohar Singh came into Court and filed a written statement in which he stated that he was willing to confess judgment and prayed that he might be relieved from the costs. The plaintiff consented to this arrangement and on the 13th of November 1923 a judgment was given as on a compromise.

On January 26, 1924, the defendant Manohar Singh filed an application for review before the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge went into the matter and after having recorded certain evidence he gave effect to the application and re-called his first decree. Against this order of the Subordinate Judge, an appeal was brought to this Court which was filed as a first appeal from order.

It is true that under the provisions of O. XLIII, r. (1) cl. (u) an appeal lies against an order under r. 4, O. XLVII granting an application for review. A reference to r. 7 of O. XLVII, however, shows that an appeal does not lie in all cases in which the application for review has been granted. An appeal is only entertainable when the grounds specified in O. XLVII, r. 7 (1) had been established.

The learned Judges of this Court were of opinion that the appellant had not shown that he was entitled to appeal against the order of the Court of first instance, inasmuch as he was not able to show that the grounds specified in O. XLVII, r. 7 were present in the case. The learned Judges, however, proceeded to treat the petition of appeal as a petition for revision, and came to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge had entertained the application for review without jurisdiction. They set aside his order by their judgment dated the 7th of July 1925. It is against this order of the Court passed in revisional jurisdiction that the present application for leave to appeal has been filed.

It is clear that the applicant for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council has not got an absolute right of appeal under the provisions of the Code. The case is one which falls within s. 109 (c) of the C. P. C., and it, therefore, lies upon the applicant to establish that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. It may be mentioned moreover that the valuation of the suit and the valuation taken in this Court was Rs. 8,000 only.

We are asked to certify that this is a case which is fit for appeal, on the ground that it raises a substantial question of law of general importance. In our opinion it does not do anything of the sort. The Judges of this Court had before them the question as to whether the Subordinate Judge had authority and jurisdiction to entertain the application for review on the grounds of fraud and undue influence. On their interpretation of the law as laid down in O. XLVII, r. 1 they were of opinion that these were no grounds on which it was competent to the Subordinate Judge to entertain the application for review. They have followed a decision of this Court and also a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (1). In that case it was held that O. XLVII, r. 1 of the C. P. C. must be read as in itself definitive of the limits within which review of a decree or order is now permitted and the words "any other sufficient reason" mean grounds at least analogous to those specified in the rule. The Judges of this Court were of opinion that fraud or undue influence did not constitute grounds analogous to those specified in O. XLVII, r. 1. Being of opinion, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge acted without jurisdiction they set aside his order.

It seems to us no question of law is involved at all for the law has already been settled in the sense adopted by the learned Judges of this Court. We have just mentioned the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council which seems to us to settle the law on the point. No case has, therefore, been made out for appeal to His Majesty in Council and we, therefore, dismiss this application with costs including fees on the higher scale.

First appeal, under s. 39 of Act VI of 1918, from an order of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Ambala, dated the 30th May 1924.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., and Messrs. Shamair Chand and Sagar Chand, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this suit are the Firm Budhu Mal Parma Nand plaintiffs and (1) Gokal Chand, (2) Hari Chand, (3) Puran Chand and (4, 5 and 6) the three minor sons of Gokal Chand, defendants. The suit was based on three hundis all dated the 4th June 1922, (1) for Rs. 2,500 due after 245 days, (2) for Rs. 2,500 due after 355 days and (3) for Rs. 250 payable after 300 days. The suit was instituted on the 29th May 1923.

The lower Court dismissed the suit on the grounds that there was no proper presentation of the first two hundis on the dates of maturity, that the third hundi was not properly stamped and so was inadmissible in evidence and that the plaintiffs could not fall back upon the original consideration for it, because the plaintiffs intended the hundi to be an absolute payment of the previous debt.

In appeal it is argued in respect of the first two hundis that the presentation was not necessary because the drawers were themselves the drawees. These hundis were signed by Hari Chand for himself and Gokal Chand and by Puran Chand and they were drawn upon Janki Das-Baishambar Das. The defendants Gokal Chand and Hari Chand pleaded that they themselves were the sole owners of the Firm Janki Das-Bishambar Das. Puran Chand's plea was that he signed the hundis merely as a witness, a point which, as judgment will show, is yet to be decided.

We agree with the findings of the lower Court that the hundis were not presented but it was held in Pachkauri Lal v. Mul Chand (1) that when the drawer and the drawee of a hundi are the same person no presentation on due date is necessary as from the nature of the case the drawer cannot suffer damage from the want of such presentation and thus] s. 76, cl. (d) of the Negotiable Instruments Act applies.

The learned Sub-Judge has observed in his judgment that the plaintiffs did not rely on s. 76 (d) and did not show that the defendants could not suffer any damage owing to non-presentation, but it seems to us that the inability of the drawer to suffer damage is obvious and that it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to make a specific reference in their pleas to s. 76 (d). We hold on the first issue that no presentation of the hundis was necessary.

As regards the third hundi for Rs. 250 we again disagree with the learned Senior Subordinate Judge who correctly stated that it is a question of fact to be decided in each particular case whether the parties intended the subsequent hundi to be an absolute or a conditional payment of the original debt, and that the presumption was that the effect of giving or taking of a bill or note was that the debt was conditionally paid. The learned Subordinate Judge considered that this presumption was rebutted in the present case by the fact that previous promissory notes for the original debt were returned to the defendants. According to the plaintiffs' statement in the lower Court which was admitted by the defendants matters commenced by two loans by the plaintiffs to the defendants as proprietors of the Firm Janki Das-Bishambar Das the first of Rs. 4,000 and the second of Rs. 6,000. Promissory notes were taken and the defendants made certain payments both of interest and of principal. On the 4th June 1922 Rs. 5,250 remained due from the defendants and they received back the promissory notes and executed the hundis in suit according to which they were to pay up the amount within the period fixed in the hundis. In our opinion the principles of law applicable are laid down in Firm Rahmat Ali-Muhammad Faizi v. Firm Dewa Singh-Man Singh (2) and we think that the learned Subordinate Judge has overlooked the improbability of the plaintiffs agreeing to take a mere piece of wastepaper as an absolute payment of a portion of their debt. The intention of the parties seems to us to have been to grant time to the defendants in lieu of making them liable on promissory notes payable on demand. We hold, therefore, on issue No. 11 that the plaintiffs can revert to the original loan and make it the basis of their claim in respect of Rs. 250 of the third hundi.

The suit has been determined by the lower Court on these who preliminary points. We accept the appeal and setting aside the judgment of the lower Court we remand the suit for a fresh decision on the other issues under O. XXI, r. 23, C. P. C. The stamp on appeal will be refunded and costs will be costs in the cause.

The question whether the suit was premature or unduly precipitate in regard to the second hundi payable after 355 days and the effect of such being the case remains open. The above order applies only to the three defendants Gokal Chand, Hari Chand, and Puran Chand, since before us the plaintiffs have withdrawn their appeal against the three minors Miwan Mal, Brij

Lal, and Bihari Lal, and so far as they are concerned the dismissal of the suit by the Trial Court will stand.

Where a trustee of a charitable fund lends the trust funds to a merchant, the latter does not hold the funds as a trustee and if he happens to become an insolvent the trust must rank as an ordinary creditor of the insolvent in the insolvency proceedings.

Mr. Shrikishindas Lulla, for the Official Receiver.

Mr. Hassumal M. Gurbaxani, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—If the facts are truly stated it is a sad case. That seems to be quite clear. The facts stated are that Mohandas wished to create a charity in favour of cows. For that purpose Mohandas set aside Rs. 2,000. He invested this Rs. 2,000 with the insolvent and interest on it was to be paid every month and applied by the father or the son Hassanand for feeding cows, that is to say, to charity. Shortly before his insolvency the insolvent paid off this Rs. 2,000 in the following way.

He sold a certain property to the mortgagee. That property was sold for a sum of about Rs. 1,500 beyond the amount due on the mortgage and that sum of money was allowed to remain in the hands of the mortgagee Lalchand in that the interest on that amount should be paid to Hassanand with the consent of Hassanand and Rs. 500 was paid by the insolvent by way of a transfer of certain plot to Hassanand. Thus was made by the sum of Rs. 2,000 out of which cows were to be sustained as originally intended by Mohandas. These are the facts which were stated and may be taken for the present purposes to be correct facts. As a matter of fact Hassanand is a first cousin of the insolvent and he also claims to be considerable creditor in respect of other transactions.

Now no doubt if this sum of Rs. 2,000 has been paid by the insolvent to Hassanand on account of ordinary debt, it would be a clear preference, however clearly that debt was due, however sacred the obligation on Deomal from a moral point of view to re-pay this money may have been. It is particularly in the case of hardship that preference is likely to take place and all such transactions must be set aside according to the strict letter of the law whether the transfer is actuated by reprehensible or honest motives. But it is pleaded that this transaction is not liable to be set aside because it was a trust transaction. After examining Deomal and looking into the accounts I find that there is no evidence that Deomal was a trustee for the charity, that is to say, he was not a trustee in respect of Rs. 2,000 if this Rs. 2,000 was earmarked for the purpose of forming a charitable fund. The persons who possessed that fund were Mohandas and Hassanand. If Mohandas and Hassanand chose to utilise the trust funds by lending them to merchants instead of depositing those trust funds in trust securities hoping thus to earn a high rate of interest, that does not convert the debt due by the merchant to the lenders into a trust transaction. The matter is one simply of a debt in respect of money lent by the trustee and due by the merchant. It is not the merchant who holds as a trustee and to whom the beneficiary is to look for the payment and for the benefits secured to them by the trust. I cannot say that this sum of Rs. 2,000 was in the hands of Deomal as a trustee. It seems to me, therefore, he was not authorized to re-pay the amount to Hassanand at the time he did and that payment should be held preferential and null.

Estoppel, equitable—Fraudulent acquiescence.

Mere acquiescence cannot deprive a person of his legal rights, unless he has acted in such a way as would make it fraudulent for him to set up those rights. The elements necessary to constitute such fraudulent acquiescence are—

(1) that the trespasser must have made a mistake as to his legal rights,

(2) that he must have expended some money or must have done some act (not necessarily upon the land of the owner of the legal right) on the faith of his mistaken belief,

(3) that the possessor of the legal right must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the trespasser,

(4) that the possessor of the legal right must know of the trespasser's mistaken belief of his rights,

(5) that the possessor of the legal right must have encouraged the trespasser in his expenditure of money or in the other acts which he has done, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal rights [p 1018, col 2]

Where all these elements exist there is fraud of such a nature as will entitle the Court to restrain the possessor of the legal right from exercising it, but nothing short of all these will do. [ibid]

Letters Patent Appeal against a judgment of Mr. Justice Daniels, dated the 25th February 1924.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Messrs Sarlanath Mukerji and Baleshwari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been argued at length before us and we are asked to interfere with the judgment of the Judge of this Court on the ground that he ought not to have decreed demolition of a certain structure in favour of the plaintiffs.

The suit was a suit in ejectment, the plaintiffs alleging that the defendant had trespassed on a small portion of land belonging to them and had erected a building. The suit was filed in the month of November 1918 and the allegation in the plaint was that the defendant had begun to erect the building during the Civil Court vacation which in the year 1918 lasted from the 20th of September to the 19th of October 1918.

The plaintiffs prayed for the ejectment of the defendant and also for the demolition of the construction just mentioned.

The defence was that the land in suit was the property of the defendant and not of the plaintiffs, and a further plea was taken in para. 12 of the written statement to the effect that the claim of the plaintiffs was barred on the principle of "tacit acquiescence and waiver."

The Court of first instance found that the title to this land was clearly with the plaintiffs and that the defendant had no title at all. On the other hand, when it came to deal with the question of the right of the plaintiffs to have the construction demolished the Court of first instance refused to order demolition on the ground that the construction was already complete. In dealing with this part of the case the Munsif observed as follows:—

"As to the waiver the plaintiffs say that the wall, that is, the eastern portion of the southern wall of the defendant's house was built during the long vacation of the Civil Court in 1918 in spite of the plaintiffs' protest. This point is not definitely proved by the plaintiffs and the wall is already built and the roof put upon it. Therefore, in these circumstances, I do not think it right to order the demolition of the building itself but instead I award the plaintiffs Rs. 100 damages for that portion of the land."

This judgment was maintained in appeal by the Subordinate Judge. He also refused to order demolition and gives his reasons as follows:—

"The appellant has built a costly structure on the land and I am not satisfied that the respondents could not have prevented the construction if they had taken action in time. They must, therefore, suffer the consequences of their laches and must be content with the damages awarded to them."

The learned Judge of this Court who had the second appeal before him was of opinion, that the lower Courts had not given any sufficient reasons for refusing an order for demolition, and after hearing the argument of Counsel we think the learned Judge of this Court was quite right. The law on the subject of equitable estoppel has been expended in the case of Wilmott v. Barber (1). In dealing with the subject of acquiescence Fry, J., ob-

"It has been said that the acquiescence which will deprive a man of his legal rights must amount to fraud, and in my view that is an abbreviated statement of a very true proposition. A man is not to be deprived of his legal rights unless he has acted in such a way as would make it fraudulent for him to set up those rights. What, then, are the elements or requisities necessary to constitute fraud of that description? In the first place the plaintiff must have made a mistake as to his legal rights. Secondly, the plaintiff must have expended some money or must have done some act (not necessarily upon the defendant's land) on the faith of his mistaken belief. Thirdly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the plaintiff. If he does not know of it he is in the same position as the plaintiff, and the doctrine of acquiescence is founded upon conduct with a knowledge of your legal rights. Fourthly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the plaintiff's mistaken belief of his rights. If he does not, there is nothing which calls upon him to assert his own rights. The defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must have encouraged the plaintiff's expenditure of money or in some other acts which he has done, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal right. Where all these elements exist, there is fraud of such a nature as will entitle the Court to restrain the possessor of the legal right from exercising it, but, in my judgment, nothing short of this will do."

Applying these principles to the case now before us it seems to us that the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court was right in finding that no case had been made out by either of the Courts below for refusing the plaintiffs' demolition of the construction. It has been argued before us that the defendant-appellant was under a mistaken belief that the land in dispute belonged to him. Even assuming that to be proved the defendant would still not be entitled to succeed in this appeal for it would be necessary for him to establish the other matters referred to in the judgment of Fry, J. From the judgment of the Courts below, however, it does not appear to us that the defendant-appellant could have entertained any bona fide belief that he was the owner of the land in question.

We are of opinion that the appeal fails and we dismiss it accordingly with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

We order the defendant to clear the ground mentioned in para. 10 (a) of the plaint of the building now upon it and this he is to do by the 4th of April 1926. If by that date this order has not been completely obeyed the plaintiffs should move this Court, and no other, on a motion for contempt.

MUNICIPALITY OF TANDO

KHAIR MAHOMED AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss 105, 115, O. VI, r. 17, O XXXIX, r 2—Amendment of plaint, when to be allowed—Refusal to allow amendment—Revision—Interference by High Court—Defendant in possession—Temporary injunction restraining defendant's user, when can be granted.

The High Court has power to interfere with the proceedings of a lower Court even in the case of an interlocutory order where the effect of that interlocutory order is not merely to prescribe a particular procedure, to admit or to shut out a particular piece of evidence or to admit or exclude particular parties. Where the Court against whose orders there is an application for revision has so used its jurisdiction that the result of allowing its order to stand will be definitely to decide the case pending before it so that all the proceedings thereafter taken would be merely infructuous and would result in a waste of time, then the High Court will look into the order and if justice requires it will set it aside [p 1020, cols 1 & 2]. In a proper case the Court should freely allow an amendment of the plaint so as to ensure that justice is done to the parties and that the time and the money of the parties is not wasted [p 1020, col 2].

Where a Court refuses to allow an amendment of the plaint in a case in which such amendment is necessary for the purpose of doing justice between the parties, it fails to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law and its order is open to revision under s. 115 of the C.P. C. [p. 1021, col. 1.]

Courts, as a general rule, refuse to interfere by way of injunction to restrain a defendant from making such use as he may think fit of the property of which he is in possession. But in certain cases the Court would interfere with the rights of the defendant, for instance where the defendant contemplates the destruction, or a change in the nature, of the corpus. JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiffs who are the Municipality of Tando Adam brought an action against the Muhammadan community of Tando Adam putting down 16 persons as representing that community under O. I, r. 8, averring that the Muhammadan community had trespassed without any right or title on certain piece of property which belonged to the Municipality and were erecting a Masjid on that property and accordingly they asked for a declaration that the plaint property was the exclusive property of the plaintiffs and that the defendants had no right to build thereon without the permission of the plaintiffs and asked for a perpetual injunction against the defendants restraining them from building on the property or committing any trespass thereon. The defendants raised their defence that the property was in their possession and the suit in its form was then not maintainable. The issues were framed both on that plea and on the question of the title, ownership and possession. Thereon the plaintiffs made an application asking to be allowed to amend their plaint by asking for an alternative relief that if the Court held that the defendants were in possession of the property then in that case, the Court should decree that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover possession of the property in dispute with all the rights and interests pertaining thereto from the defendants. They showed their willingness to stampon Rs. 600 and they asked further for a decree directing the defendants to make over vacant possession to them.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Shahdadpur-Nawabshah rejected that application to amend the plaint on the ground that there had been a lack of good faith on the part of the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge was of the opinion that the plaintiffs were well aware at the time they filed their plaint that they should have asked for possession and that the reason why they failed to ask for possession and asked for a declaration was that they anticipated that if they admitted that the defendants were in possession they would be unable to obtain an injunction restraining the defendants from dealing with the property in their possession. The learned Subordinate Judge thought that the plaintiffs having filed the suit in a form which enabled them to ask for an injunction and also to obtain an injunction, could not be permitted to re-cast their suit so as to change it to the form in which they should originally have brought it and in which they would not have been able to obtain the injunction and he, therefore, refused permission to amend. And it is against that order the present revision application is brought.

The first objection taken to the application is on the ground that no power exists in this Court to revise interlocutory orders under s. 115 and we are referred to the case given in Firm of Yusifally Alibhoy Karimji and Co. v. Firm of Haji Mahomed-Haji Abdullah (1). We have no desire to elude or evade in any way the effect of that decision. If we may say so it covers the whole ground and apparently accurately ascertains the power of this Court in such matters. This Court has set its face against applications to revise interlocutory orders as part of the ordinary routine of litigation and where the interlocutory order sought to be revised is interlocutory order of the type referred to in Firm of Yusifally Alibhoy Karimji and Co. v. Firm of Haji Mahomed-Haji Abdullah (1) this Court will refuse to interfere and will not order the lower Court to adopt a particular kind of procedure. But, on the other hand, this Court has always retained in its hands and has never denied its right to interfere with the proceedings of the lower Court even in the case of an interlocutory order where the effect of the interlocutory order is not merely to prescribe a particular procedure, to admit or to shut out particular piece of evidence, or to admit or exclude particular parties or the like provided that such orders are such as cannot be made a ground of appeal against the decree when finally passed and do not go to the very root of the case. Where, however, the Judge against whose order there is an application for revision has so used his jurisdiction that the result of allowing his order to stand will be definitely to decide the case pending before him, so that all the proceedings thereafter taken would be merely infructuous and waste of time and where as here the interlocutory order could not be made the ground of an appeal against the final decree, then we have always held ourselves at liberty (considering that his order has practically been a decision of the case) to look into his order and if justice requires it to set that order aside. That is also in accordance with the way in which the High Court of Bombay deals with questions of interlocutory orders when such are made subject of application in revision.

Now, it would appear, if the order is a wrong order, it is more than an erroneous decision on a mere ancillary or subsidiary point. The effect of this order, if it is wrong, is to deny definitely and finally to the plaintiffs the remedy to which they conceive themselves to be entitled. And if it is a wrong order, therefore, under the principles laid down above it seems we can and should modify it. We think the present case is clearly to be distinguished from the case of Firm of Yusifally Alibhoy Karimji & Co. v. Firm of Haji Mahomed-Haji Abdullah (1) and we have no doubt that if this order is a wrong order, we ought to modify it.

Now, looking into this case, it would appear that the learned Subordinate Judge had certainly jurisdiction to allow the amendment of the plaint and the whole course of decisions is as he has himself said that in proper cases the Courts should freely allow amendments of plaints so as to ensure that justice is done to the parties and the time and the expense of the parties is not wasted. But the reason why he failed to exercise this salutary jurisdiction was due to a misconception on his part. He was of the opinion that if the suit had been brought in the form of which he approved, namely, in the form of the action to recover possession, the plaintiffs could not have got an injunction prohibiting the building of the mosque. Now in that view he seems to be in error. It is true that Courts, as a general rule, refuse to interfere by way of injunction to restrain a defendant from making such use as he may think fit of the property of which he is in possession. But in certain cases the Court would interfere with the rights of the defendant. It would certainly interfere when the defendant contemplates destruction of the corpus. Now the aver-ment here is that the intention of the defendant was to erect a mosque and throw it open to the public for prayer. That is to say assuming the possession to have been with defendants they intended to transfer that possession to Almighty God and thus to render it impossible for the plaintiffs to recover possession of the property even in case they were entitled to it. There is no doubt to my mind that had the plaintiffs brought the suit in the form which the learned Subordinate Judge thinks, they should have, and had the plaintiffs frankly admitted that the defendants had improperly withheld possession and were intending to use their precarious and forcible possession for the purpose of wresting finally and definitely from the hands of the plaintiffs this plot of land in that case the Court could and would have properly prohibited the defendants from proceeding with the erection of the structure of the mosque. It was not, therefore, through any sinister act of ill-faith that the Municipality failed to bring the suit in the form they should have selected. It was not until the written statements of the defendants were filed, that they found that possession was set up by the defendants. Finding that to be so they reasonably enough wished to change the form of suit and made an application for that purpose. And, in our opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge did fail to exercise a jurisdiction which was vested in him, namely, the jurisdiction to allow the alteration of the plaint in a case in which he should have exercised that jurisdiction.

Therefore, we think that we are entitled to revise this order. A further point is raised, that is, there is some defect in the parties owing to the fact that one of the defendants had died and his legal representatives have not been put on the record. We are not able to say anything definitely because we have not got before us the necessary order of the Court and we do not know precisely in what capacity the defendant was impleaded. And, as a matter of fact, the same objection can be taken and decided during the proceeding at the trial. We think we ought not to decide that point one way or the other or express any opinion as to what would be the effect of the failure to join the legal representatives of a defendant who has been impleaded under O. I. r. 8.

On the whole, therefore, we set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Shahdampur Nawabshah, direct him to amend the plaint as prayed and to decide the case according to law.

Costs to be costs in the cause.

JUDGMENT.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—Before dealing with the questions of law raised, I shall briefly set forth the facts.

Lakshmana Chetty entered into a partition with his co-parceners, under the deed of division dated 9th February 1918. A sum of money fell to his share and this sum was retained under the terms of that deed with his brother Ramalinga Chetty. The appellant filed a suit for money (O. S. No. 495 of 1919) against Lakshmana and attached before judgment the debt due to him under the partition deed. The appellant on 3rd July 1919 obtained a decree in his suit. Lakshmana sometime after this filed a suit against Ramalinga Chetty (O. S. No. 772 of 1920) for recovery of the money due to him under the partition deed and obtained a decree. Lakshmana and Ramalinga within a month of this decree entered into a settlement and Lakshmana reported satisfaction which was recorded.

The decree was obtained by Lakshmana in O. S. No. 772 of 1920, on 2nd February 1921. Satisfaction was entered on 2nd March 1921 and the appellant on 27th July 1921 applied to execute the decree in O. S. No. 772 of 1920.

The first question that has to be determined is, can the appellant who has attached the debt but who has failed to attach this decree, execute it as if he has attached the decree also,

The attachment of a debt is effected under O. XXI, r. 46, C. P. C. It is made by a written order prohibiting the creditor from recovering the debt and the debtor from paying it. It is conceded that the attachment was in force on the date Ramalinga alleges he satisfied the decree by payment to Lakshmana. Ramalinga in making the payment acted in contravention of the prohibitory order and Lakshmana in receiving the debt was equally guilty of disobedience of that order.

Under s. 64, C. P. C., any payment to the judgment-debtor contrary to the attachment is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. For the appellant Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, his learned Vakil, contends that if it was incumbent upon him to follow up the attachment of the debt by attaching the decree, Ramalinga could successfully plead that his payment was not void against the attachment of the decree. In other words, if the appellant could trace his rights to the attachment of the debt, the payment relied on by Ramalinga subsequent to that attachment would be void against it; but if the source of the appellant's title should be held to be attachment of the decree, Ramalinga could successfully rely upon the payment made prior to that attachment. To bring out the point of Mr. Sitarama Rao's contention I shall take an illustration. A attaches a debt due from C to B. Then B sues C and obtains a decree. On the same day as judgment is obtained, C pays up the amount to B. If the right rule is that the decree must be attached, A may be easily defeated; for, even more than ordinary diligence on his part will not prevent B from receiving and C from paying the sum decreed.

The C. P. C. does not contain a provision to the effect that the payment shall be void not only as against the later attachment of the decree but also as against the prior attachment of the debt. To this extent there is a lacuna in the Code. But by a distinct provision the creditor is prohibited from paying the debt attached. In the circumstances, what is the reasonable view to take? I am prepared to hold that the attachment placed on the debt fastens itself on the decree without any further act on the part of the attaching creditor. The debt matures into and merges in the decree and the attachment gets naturally transferred from the debt to the decree.

Consistent with the policy and the provisions of the Code this, in my opinion, is the only reasonable view to take. It has been held by the Judicial Committee in Beti Maharani v. Collector of Etawah (1) that when a debt is attached a suit for its recovery is not stayed. The order of attachment is infringed only if the restrained debtor pays the debt to the restrained creditor and it is pointed out that very often it may be desirable to institute a suit. Can the attaching creditor's rights be then defeated by the debtor converting the simple debts into a decree debt and receiving payment? The common sense of the thing demands that this cannot be countenanced.

The appellant's learned Vakil relies upon s. 146 of the C. P. C., which runs thus.—

"Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force, where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person, then the proceeding may be taken or application may be made by or against any person claiming under him."

Lakshmana could apply to execute the decree. The appellant as one claiming under him could likewise execute it. This contention seems to me to be perfectly sound. The respondent's learned Vakil urges that O. XXI, r. 16 governs the case of a transferred decree-holder, that the provision is complete and self-contained and s. 146 cannot be invoked. I cannot accept this argument. Is there anything in O. XXI, r. 16 prohibiting persons other than those mentioned in it from being treated as transferee decree-holders? It is only in that case that s. 146 will not apply by reason of the words "save as otherwise provided by this Code." To place a narrow construction on s. 146 will be to defeat the very object of that section. In the very nature of things, it is impossible to provide by express provision for every conceivable set of facts that may arise. It is just to meet this contingency that ss. 146 and 151 have been enacted, I am against whittling down the scope of s. 146 by placing a too limited and narrow construction upon it. It must receive its full effect and I think the appellant can invoke it in the present instance.

The view I have taken receives strong support from Muthiah Chettiar v. Lodd

Govinda Doss Krishna Doss (2). The point that had to be decided was, could a transferee of a part of the decree execute it? It was contended that he could not and for that position reliance was placed on O. XXI, rr. 15 and 16. The contention advanced may be put thus. Rule 15 refers to a case of a decree passed jointly in favour of two or more persons. In that case, application for execution of the whole decree may be made by one or more of the joint decree-holders. Next r. 16 provides for the transfer (1) of an entire decree and (2) of the interest of a decree-holder in a decree passed jointly in favour of two or more persons. It was argued that the transfer by a decree-holder of a part of a decree does not fall either under r. 15 or r. 16 and the transferee in that case could not, therefore, execute the decree. It need hardly be observed that this was a most unjust contention, the Full Bench holding that s. 146 was applicable rejected the argument. Wallis, C. J., observes that the section should receive a beneficial interpretation and as execution by a transferee of a part of a decree is not prohibited by O. XXI, r. 16, there is nothing to prevent s. 146 from receiving its full effect. With the observation of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., that the Courts ought not to refuse relief on the ground that the Legislature has not made provision for a particular case, I entirely agree.

I do not think it necessary to refer in detail to the cases cited for the respondent where the scope of s. 146 was restricted. Muthurapore Zemindary Co. v. Bhasaram Mondul (3) may be taken as representing a class of cases. But this may be easily distinguished as what was assigned was property in the suit previous to the decree. In Shib Charan Das v. Ram Chandra (4), which may also serve as a type, there was a transfer of the property subsequent to the decree and it was held that the transferee could not invoke s. 146. This case also is distinguishable from the present. But I must dissent very respectfully from the observations made in it in regard to the effect to be given to s. 146. It will be more-over apparent that in the various cases relied on by the respondent (of which these two are typical) the transferee could have safeguarded his position by taking appropriate proceedings under the provisions of the Code. But in the present instance this element is wanting and, in my opinion, this makes a very great difference.

I, therefore, hold that the appellant can rely upon s. 146. Two minor contentions I may now dispose of. First, it is argued that as Lakshmana who certified that the decree was satisfied could not execute it, the appellant could have no higher rights under s. 146. This argument is based upon a misapprehension. The appellant claims under Lakshmana in the sense that he acquired Lakshmana's rights as on the date of the decree. As I have remarked the simple debt became merged in the decree debt and the moment the decree was passed the attachment of the debt became automatically converted into attachment of the decree, and any dealing by Lakshmana will not in consequence be of any avail.

The other contention has reference to certain facts which I have not so far mentioned. Lakshmana previous to filing the suit (No. 772 of 1920) against Ramalinga for the recovery of the corpus has instituted against him a suit for the interest on the debt. This suit was O. S. No. 231 of 1919 and was decreed on 16th December 1919. The appellant attached this decree and realised on 27th July 1920 about a tenth of the amount due to him. It is urged that the rights under the original attachment of the debt became thus exhausted and the appellant rendered himself incapable to pursue further remedies. This argument is untenable as what was attached was the entire debt and the recovery of a portion cannot bar the recovery of the balance.

Then remains one of the main contentions raised, namely, that the attachment is void as Lakshmana had only a contingent interest in the sum attached and s. 60, sub-cl. (m), C. P. C., declares such an interest not liable to attachment. Whether Lakshmana took a vested or a contingent interest is a question of intention and on a construction of the partition deed I find no difficulty in holding that his interest was vested. It recites that the sum fell to Lakshmana's share but is to be retained by Ramalinga who is bound to pay it over to the former at his marriage. Ramalinga cannot in the meantime alienate his property and is enjoined to pay Lakshmana's interest at a rate fixed.

It is a well-known rule of construction that if the gift and direction as to payment are distinct, the direction as to the time of payment does not postpone the vesting. The question is, are there words constituting a gift independent of the direction to pay? If there are, the interest is a vested interest. In the deed in question, there is a present gift with a postponed payment and a vested interest is thus created in In re Bartholomew (5), [In re Hart's Trusts (6), Hawkins' Wills, 2nd Edition 1912, pages 270 to 272.] A stipulation that interest shall be given in the meantime, shows that a present gift was intended. A bequest to A to be paid on his marriage with a clause that interest shall be paid till then is vested. [Vize v. Stoney (7).] The result is that the last contention also fails.

My learned brother thinks that the attachment of the debt cannot become automatically transferred into an attachment of the decree. Although we take different views on this point our conclusions do not materially differ. According to my view, attachment of the decree in the circumstances is not essential; according to my learned brother's view, this attachment cannot be dispensed with, but neither the alleged payment by Ramalinga nor the order of the Court recording satisfaction is an obstacle in the way of the appellant executing the decree. On the point, namely, whether the appellant, if he relies as a source of his title upon the attachment of the decree, can ignore a payment made prior to that attachment, I would prefer to express no opinion at present. Although we give different reasons for our conclusions, we are agreed that the appellant has not lost his remedy and that he is not bound by the alleged payment or the recording of satisfaction. I have, therefore, no objection to the appellant being directed to amend his execution petition by asking for attachment of the decree and I accordingly agree to the order being in the terms suggested in my learned brother's judgment.

Reilly, J.—I agree that Lakshmana Chetty's interest in the Rs. 1,233, to which he was entitled under the partition deed, Ex. III, was a vested interest and not a contingent interest and it was attachable under s. 60, C. P. C. and r. 6 of O. XXXVIII, C. P. C. on 17th June 1919 as a debt due to him, though on that date he could not enforce payment of it. But with great respect I find myself unable to agree that the appellant was entitled on the strength of his attachment before judgment to execute the decree for that amount which Lakshmana Chetty afterwards obtained in O. S. No. 772 of 1920 on the District Munsif's file without attaching that decree.

My view of the position in this case is as follows. The appellant instituted O. S. No. 495 of 1919 on the District Munsif's file a suit for money, against Lakshmana Chetty (respondent No. 1) and on 17th June 1919 obtained in that suit an attachment before judgment of the debt due to Lakshmana Chetty from his brother, Ramalinga Chetty (respondent No. 2) under Ex. III. The attachment order is not before us; but it is admitted that it was in the usual form, prohibiting Lakshmana Chetty from recovering the Rs. 1,233 or the interest on it and Ramalinga Chetty from paying that amount or the interest on it until the further order of the Court. On 3rd January 1920 the appellant obtained a decree in his suit against Lakshmana Chetty for Rs. 624. It is not disputed that the attachment order prohibiting Lakshmana Chetty and Ramalinga Chetty from recovering and paying the debt respectively was not affected by that decree but remained in full force after the making of that decree. Meanwhile Lakshmana Chetty, who had filed O. S. No. 231 of 1919 against Ramalinga Chetty for the whole debt due to him under Ex. III, had on 16th December 1919 obtained a decree in that suit only for the interest on the principal amount, his claim for the principal amount being dismissed as premature on the ground that he had not then been married and, therefore, had not fulfilled the condition on which the principal was to become payable. The appellant's attachment before judgment did not prevent Lakshmana Chetty from prosecuting that suit to a decree; but it did prohibit him from recovering any amount under his decree. The appellant then attached in execution of his own decree the decree for interest which Lakshmana Chetty had obtained in O. S. No. 231 of 1919, executed the latter decree under r. 53 of O. XXI,

C. P. C. and realised the amount due under it, Rs. 63-4-0 from Ramalinga Chetty. It has been suggested before us for Ramalinga Chetty that the execution of this decree of Lakshmana Chetty against him for the interest so far due on the Rs. 1,233 somehow extinguished the appellant's attachment before judgment of the whole debt. I agree that that could not be so and that the order prohibiting Lakshmana Chetty from recovering and Ramalinga Chetty from paying the debt persisted after the execution by the appellant of Lakshmana Chetty's decree in O. S. No. 231 of 1919. Later on Lakshmana Chetty fulfilled the condition of marriage and instituted another suit, O. S. No. 772 of 1920 on the District Munsif's file, against Ramalinga Chetty for the principal amount of Rs. 1,233 and the interest on it not so far recovered. That he was entitled to do in spite of the appellant's attachment before judgment; and he obtained a decree for the whole amount claimed and costs on 2nd February 1921. That decree the appellant could have attached and executed under r. 53 of O. XXI as he had already attached and executed the decree in Lakshmana Chetty's previous suit, O. S. No. 231 of 1919. But before he bestirred himself to do so, Lakshmana Chetty on 22nd February 1921 took out an arrest warrant against Ramalinga Chetty, who appears to have been arrested under it, on 2nd March, 1921 Lakshmanan Chetty reported to the Court Ramalinga Chetty had paid the full amount of the decree to him, and the District Munsif recorded full satisfaction. On 27th July 1921, the appellant applied for permission to execute under r. 16 of O. XXI, C. P. C. Lakshmana Chetty's decree against Ramalinga Chetty in O. S. No. 772 of 1920. That is the petition against the dismissal of which, after confirmation of the dismissal by the Subordinate Judge the present appeal is preferred.

The appellant claimed to execute the decree under r. 16 of O. XXI. He did not attach Lakshmana Chetty's decree under r. 53 of O. XXI, and in explanation of his failure to do so it is suggested that he could not do so because the recording of satisfaction on 2nd March 1921 stood in his way. I may remark that, if the recording of satisfaction stood in the way of this attaching the decree in July 1921 it equally stood in the way of the appellant executing the decree as a transferee under r. 16 of O. XXI,

But I cannot see that the recording of satisfaction was a bar to execution of the decree by the appellant. There is nothing sacrosanct about the recording of satisfaction. As between Lakshmana Chetty and Ramalinga Chetty the admission of Lakshmana Chetty that he has received the full amount of the decree may be conclusive. So far as the purposes of the Court are concerned, the recording of satisfaction is a mere matter of office business, a note that these proceedings are closed. In my opinion, it cannot be supposed for a moment that by settling the decree between themselves and getting the Court to record satisfaction as between them, Lakshmana Chetty and Ramalinga Chetty were able to defeat the rights of third parties, still less that they were able by so doing to evade the prohibitory order against them, which was still in force. To allow them so to defeat the order obtained by the appellant would be to allow a clear abuse of the process of the Court and a clear fraud upon the Court. It is not disputed that the District Munsif recorded satisfaction in ignorance of the appellant's attachment before judgment, which was not brought to his notice. Even between the parties to a decree an order recording satisfaction which has been obtained by fraud may be vacated see Paranjpe v. Kanade (8) and Vilakathala Raman v. Vayalil Pachu (9). As stated in Syud Tuffuzzool Hussein Khan v. Rughoonath Pershad (10) which was quoted before us for another purpose, "to proceed so far as the practice of his Court will allow him to re-call and cancel an invalid order is not simply permitted to, but is the duty of a Judge, who should always be vigilant not to allow the act of the Court itself to do wrong to the suitor". That principle is now clearly recognised in s. 151, C. P. C. In my opinion, had the appellant in July 1921, applied for the attachment of Lakshmana Chetty's decree in O. S. No. 772 of 1920 and had Ramalinga Chetty then objected that he had already satisfied the decree by payment to Lakshmana Chetty, the answer would have been that that payment made in defiance of the prohibitory order obtained by the appellant and still in force, could affect the appellant in no way; and, if it had been further objected that the formal order of the District Munsif made on 2nd March 1921 recording satisfaction of the decree, stood in the appellant's way—and objection which personally I see very little force—it would obviously have been within the District Munsif's power under s. 151, C. P. C. to cancel that order. In my view the proper course for the appellant in July 1921 was to attach the decree in O. S. No. 772 of 1920 under r. 53 of O. XXI and proceed to execute it against Ramalinga Chetty, who could have raised no effective bar to his doing so. Section 61, C. P. C., would not perhaps have been applicable, as the appellant would not have been enforcing his decree under his original attachment before judgment but under his attachment of the decree itself. But, as the satisfaction of the decree by Ramalinga Chetty could not have been pleaded successfully against the appellant, the road to the execution of the decree by the ordinary procedure of attaching it would have been open to him.

It has been contended before us that it was unnecessary for the appellant to attach Lakshmana Chetty's decree on the debt in O. S. No. 772 of 1920 because on the making of that decree the appellant's original attachment of the debt is some way developed into an attachment of the decree. With respect I am unable to accept the contention. Attachments in execution or before judgment are in their nature merely means of getting the property concerned into the control of the Court and of restraining the party against whom they are directed from transferring, delivering, changing or destroying the property. By special provisions in r. 53 of O. XXI an attachment in execution of any of certain special classes of decrees—not all decrees carries with it a special privilege, namely, the right to execute the decree attached. This is a peculiar privilege in itself quite foreign to the idea of attachment and given only by special provisions. Unless those special provisions are complied with, I do not understand how that special privilege can be acquired. In the present case what the appellant got when the debt was attached at his instance was an order prohibiting Lakshmana Chetty from recovering it and Ramalinga Chetty from paying it. He acquired by that order no right to sue on the debt or to collect it or to give a valid discharge of it. How can the prohibitory order which he obtained grow or ripen into or converted into something quite different, namely, the right to execute a decree obtained on the debt? It appears to me that that is impossible without some provision of law to that effect. The special privilege of executing Lakshmana Chetty's decree, it is something quite different in nature and effect from the prohibitory order was in my view open to the appellant only if he took, as he could have taken, the special step necessary for obtaining that privilege, namely, the attachment of the decree. Incidentally I may point out as a minor difficulty in the theory that the attachment of the debt automatically develops into the attachment of any decree on that debt that the decree will in most cases include an amount for costs, to which the attachment of the debt itself cannot apply. In the present case the costs awarded to Lakshmana Chetty by the decree in O. S. No. 772 of 1920 were considerable.

(8) 6 B. 148; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 557.

(9) 25 Ind. Cas. 213; 27 M. L. J. 172.

I do not think it necessary to consider in this case the question whether the appellant should be regarded "as claiming under" Lakshmana Chetty in any sense within the meaning of s 146, C. P. C. As the case appears to me, the appellant might have proceeded under the definite provisions of r. 53 of O. XXI, and it, therefore, is unnecessary and indeed impossible—for him to call in aid for his present purpose the provisions of s. 146. Similarly the appellant is in my view mistaken in attempting to represent that he is in any sense a transferee of Lakshmana Chetty's decree under r. 16 of O. XXI, instead of claiming his right to attach that decree and then execute it. If I may say so, the appellant, in attempting to make use of s. 146 and r. 16 of O. XXI in this case appears to be taking a very circuitous route to get round an obstacle which does not really lie in his path or which at the worst would crumble at a touch, namely, the District Munsif's order recording satisfaction.

I do not think that the appellant's petition under appeal should have been dismissed. The proper course would have been to allow him to amend it by adding a prayer for the attachment of the decree in O. S. No. 772 of 1920. I agree that the present appeal should be allowed with costs that the dismissal of the appellant's execution petition should be set aside and that the petition should be remanded to the District Munsif for fresh disposal; but I would add a direction that the District Munsif should allow the appellant to add a prayer for the attachment of Lakshmana Chetty's decree in O. S. No. 772 of 1920.

They mean an order which puts to an end a litigation between parties, or at all events disposes so substantially of the matters in issue between them as to leave only subordinate or ancillary matters for decision [p. 1028, col 2]

The order by which a Court sets aside a compromise of a suit is an interlocutory and not a final order. [p. 1028, col 1]

Mr. Sarlanath Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by Bhagwati Dayal for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council in consequence of the reversal by this Court of the decision of the Subordinate Judge, who allowed a compromise between the parties.

The plaintiff brought a suit on the allegation that he had been adopted in 1916 by Musammat Dhan Kunwar, a defendant, under a verbal authority given by her deceased husband, Salig Ram. Another defendant who was impleaded was Ajudhia Prasad, he having obtained a mortgage on some of Salig Ram's property. After both the defendants had filed separate written statements denying the alleged adoption the parties were said to have come to a compromise, which was evidenced by a document, dated the 6th of August 1923, registered on the 8th of August. In the ordinary course the Subordinate Judge issued a commission for verification of the deed by the pardanashin lady, Musimmat Dhan Kunwar, and she denied any knowledge of the compromise or having put her thumb-impression upon any document evidencing an agreement by which the suit was to be brought to a close. She set up that if it were in fact her thumb-impression on the document, that it might have been obtained from her during a period of illness. The learned Subordinate Judge thereupon inquired into the question, took evidence on both sides, and came to the opinion that in point of fact the lady had entered into the compromise well knowing it to be the compromise of the suit and having adequate and proper advice and protection from people who surrounded her. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, passed a decree in the terms of the compromise.

From that order by which the compromise was to be recorded the lady appealed, and a Bench of this Court came to the conclusion that although in fact the thumb-impression was that of the lady, the document was not fully explained to her, that she did not understand its nature, nor had she independent advice, and thereupon they set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge.

The value of the subject-matter of the suit and the value for the purposes of the proposed appeal to His Majesty in Council is in excess of Rs. 10,000; and the contention of Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, who appears for the alleged adopted son, Bhagwati Dayal, is that the order of this High Court is appealable to the Privy Council. It happens that there is a decision reported as Shankar Bharati v. Narasinha Bharati (1) where in fact the exact question arose. Shah, A. C. J., and Crump, J., came to the conclusion, on slightly different reasoning, that the order by which a Court set aside a compromise was an interlocutory and not a final order. Mr. Justice Crump said in the course of his judgment "All that this order does is to decide that the manner in which the lower Court disposed of this suit was incorrect, and that the suit must be disposed of on the merits, and not upon a certain compromise. I cannot see myself that this is in any sense a final order. I take the word 'final' to be used in its ordinary sense and, therefore, to mean an order which puts an end to the litigation between the parties or, at all events disposes so substantially of the matters in issue between them as to leave merely subordinate or ancillary matters for decision".

There is also a decision of this Court in Muhammad Sajjad Ali Khan v. Muhammad Ishaq Khan (2) in which a Bench having considered all the authorities, and specially having had regard to a decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Danby v. Tufazul Hussain (3) concluded the judgment as follows: "All of these cases are conveniently grouped up in the Patna decision and there is thus a uniform consensus of opinion that appeals on matters interlocutory in their nature should be allowed to be preferred to His Majesty in Council only when their decision will practically put an end to the litigation and finally decide the rights of the parties". We think that is the test which ought to be applied and in this case it is obvious that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council would in one event only finally decide the rights of one party, and in the other it would throw the whole matter open for the trial which has never yet been held upon the merits of the action. We are therefore of opinion that this matter is not appealable to His Majesty in Council and this application must be dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. His case is that the first defendant and some others were members of a joint Hindu family, that on the death of the first defendant's husband he became solely entitled to the property, that the first defendant is in wrongful possession of the items mentioned in the plaint. His claim is for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to the items mentioned in schedules A, B, C, of the plaint, for delivery of possession and for injunction and other reliefs.

The case of the defendant is that her husband was not a member of the joint family with the plaintiff on the date of his death, but that he was a divided member of the family and he was enjoying certain properties in his own right and on his death she was in possession of them in her own right.

The Subordinate Judge has found on the evidence adduced that the defendant's husband was divided in status and that she was in enjoyment of the property and dismissed the suit.

The appellant's Vakil frankly admits that he cannot dispute the correctness of the finding but his contention is, having regard to s. 92 of the Evidence Act, the finding is not admissible because there was an unregistered partition deed between the members of the family in 1914. And there being an unregistered deed all the evidence of the conduct of the parties and the rights of the various members is inadmissible. I am unable to agree with him in his contention. So far as the division of status is concerned, a recent decision of the Privy Council in Rajangam Ayyar v. Rajangam Ayyar (1) is clear to the effect that a division of status can be proved even though the document has not been registered. It has also been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that an unregistered document may be used to determine the nature of the possession held by a party. The Subordinate Judge has not relied upon any unregistered partition deed. For the purpose of coming to the conclusion he has arrived at, he takes the conduct of the parties into consideration and comes to the conclusion that not only has the division of status been proved but all the properties claimed have been enjoyed by the defendant's husband in his own right. I do not see why the evidence as regards the conduct of the parties in their dealings with each other and with regard to specific items of property should not, coupled with the finding of a division of status, be used and relied upon to show that certain properties which the plaintiff claims are not in wrongful possession of the defendant but belonged to the defendant's husband. I do not think that on the facts of the case, s. 92 of the Evidence Act is necessary to be invoked by any of the parties. The plaintiff comes into Court and says that he is the absolute owner of the property, because he is a member of an undivided family. The defendant says that her husband was not a member of an undivided family, that he was divided in status, and that he enjoyed certain properties separately, as a divided member of the family. This is not a case when a claim is made by the defendant to any property on the allegation that it came to her by virtue of a deed of partition which is unregistered and so inoperative. The plaintiff's claim as a member of the joint family could not be sustained. I think the decision of the Subordinate Judge on the facts of the case is correct and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I agree. According to the plaintiff he and the defendant's husband were undivided. On that footing he claimed possession. The defendant pleaded that there was a division. The lower Court has dismissed the plaintiff's suit. In the course of the trial it appeared that there was a writing evidencing the partition but it was not registered and no attempt was made to file it. The learned Judge has found that there was a partition relying mainly upon circumstances. He has inferred partition from circumstances such as these. The defendant's husband lent monies and realised them in his own name. He dealt with the property as if he was the absolute owner of it. He carried on a separate business and was assessed to income-tax individually. From these and similar circumstances the Judge has inferred a partition. It is now contended for the appellants that under s. 92 of the Evidence Act evidence of partition ought not to have been received. Section 92 has clearly no application. The appellant's learned Vakīl probably intends to rely upon s. 91. As the terms of the partition have been reduced to the form of a document, no evidence can be given under that section to prove the terms of that partition except the document itself. This section does not equally apply as the defendant has not attempted to give evidence in proof of the terms of the document. The evidence was directed to prove that the parties lived as members of a divided family. From their conduct the Judge as I have said inferred a partition. It was not necessary to decide what the terms were on which the partition was made, nor does the Judge purport to decide those terms. He merely finds that the parties became divided and I do not think that there is anything in the Evidence Act to prevent him from doing it. He, in effect, says "the plaintiff says the family was undivided. I find they were divided in interest". The Judge says nothing more. The plaintiff having come to Court with the case that the family was undivided and his case having been found to be false, his suit was liable to be dismissed. The plaintiff does not ask in his plaint that if there was a division in status, the Court should determine what the properties are to which he is entitled. On the finding the plaintiff's case was untrue it was open to the Judge to dismiss the suit. Section 91 is not in the defendant's way and the decision of the Judge is perfectly correct. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

"This appeal is withdrawn, hence it is dismissed. The appellant may bring a fresh suit if necessary."

Held, that the order was open to revision inasmuch as (i) it was not warranted at all by the terms of the application and (ii) it was passed without any reasons and without the Court applying its mind to the question whether there were sufficient grounds to allow a withdrawal with permission to file a fresh suit.

Civil revision against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 29th of April 1925.

Mr. Surendra Nath Verma, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision of an order passed under O. XXIII, r. 1, C. P. C., giving the plaintiff permission to file a fresh suit. The order is an extraordinary one. It was passed by the Appellate Court and runs thus:—

"This appeal is withdrawn; hence it is dismissed.....The appellant may bring a fresh suit if necessary." The effect of the dismissal of the appeal is to leave the judgment of the original Court standing, and though the learned Subordinate Judge says that the appellant may bring a fresh suit he has passed no order for withdrawing the original suit. No reasons are given for his order. It is contended that these reasons are supplied by an application presented on the same date. The application is not of a nature to support any order allowing the suit to be withdrawn with permission to bring a fresh one. It is absolutely vague. It gives no particulars whatever. It states that some matters unspecified are not mentioned in the plaint and that some other matters are not fully mentioned, and that there is some legal flaw the nature of which is not even indicated. A preliminary objection is raised that no revision lies, but it has been held in numerous cases the most recent case being Ganga Prasad v. Kiskni (1) that where an order of this kind is passed without any reasons and without the Court applying its mind in the least to the question whether there were sufficient grounds to allow a withdrawal with permission to file a fresh suit a revision application can be entertained. I find further that the application on which the order was passed was not an application to withdraw the appeal but an application to withdraw the suit. The learned Counsel for the applicant contends that as he only complains about the portion of the order which gave permission to file a fresh suit only that portion of the order can be set aside. It appears to me, however, that I must look at the order as a whole. The Court below professing to allow the application passed an order which was not at all warranted by the terms of the application. The appellant had in fact never applied to withdraw his appeal. I must, therefore, set aside the whole of the order passed by the Court below and direct that Court to re-hear the appeal on the merits.

The applicant will have his costs of this revision in any event.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant before me. The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought for a declaration of a right of way and for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from causing any obstruction to the plaintiff's use of the pathway. The defendants denied the plaintiff's right as claimed.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The plaintiff then applied for a review of the judgment of the learned Munsif. Notice was issued upon the defendants to show cause why the review should not be admitted. On the application of the defendant the application for review was taken up before the date fixed for the hearing in the notice, and was ultimately dismissed. I ought to have stated that the application for review was based upon the ground of discovery of fresh evidence. After the application for review was dismissed the plaintiff filed an appeal to the District Judge against the original judgment of the Munsif dismissing the suit. The learned Judge has dismissed the appeal on the ground that it was barred by limitation. The appeal, undoubtedly, was filed long after the time allowed by law for an appeal to be filed before a District Court. But the plaintiff prayed that the time occupied by the application for review should be deducted in calculating the period of limitation.

The learned District Judge confines himself only to the question of limitation in filing the appeal; and although his judgment contains some observations on questions as to the merits of the case discussed by the Munsif, the observations of the learned District Judge were only in reference to the question as to limitation on account of the delay in filing the appeal and not for the purpose of deciding the case on the merits. The learned District Judge says in his judgment: "He was in fact prosecuting review application with what appears to have been quite adequate diligence for a time which if credited to him would render his appeal timely." The learned Judge, therefore, finds that the application for review was filed and prosecuted with due diligence. He then says: "What is urged against him is that the review petition was not a proper one, being one, which had no reasonable prospect of success." Later on the learned Judge says: "The question for decision, therefore, is whether there were reasonable and proper grounds of review in this case." And after discussing the merits of the application for review the learned Judge says: "Regarding this part of the case, therefore, the review petition never had any prospect of success whatsoever." Then he concludes his judgment by observing "I accordingly decide that there were no reasonable or proper grounds of review and that the appeal must be rejected as time-barred."

The question no doubt primarily is a question of fact. The contention of the plaintiff was that in the circumstances of this case the Court should, in the exercise of its discretion, have held that the appellant had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within such period. The question as to the exercise of discretion is no doubt also a question which is ordinarily a question of fact. But such discretion must not be exercised arbitrarily but upon sound legal principles which govern the exercise of such discretion. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee laid down the following rule in the case of

Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (1): "It was strenuously urged by the learned Counsel for the respondents that inasmuch as the power in s. 5 is admittedly a discretionary power, this Board ought not to interfere with the discretion exercised by Mr. Justice Johnstone, and he cited cases of which Sharpe v. Wakefield (2) may be taken as a type. In reality, however, that case is against him. For it laid down that discretion there as here must be a judicial and not an arbitrary discretion. Now if the Judge who purports to exercise the discretion does so under the view that there is no general rule, when in fact there is one, if he has, to use an expression often used in another class of cases, misdirected himself as to the law to be applied to the case he cannot exercise a judicial discretion, and the Superior Court in this case this Board—must either remit the case or exercise the discretion themselves." Now the learned Vakil for the appellant has contended before me that in exercising his discretion the learned Judge has apparently recognized no principle or general rule that exists as regards the exercise of discretion. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee referred with approval to the rule which was laid down by the Full Bench of this Court in the case of In re Brojender Coomar Roy (3). The rule so approved by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee runs thus: "If a party presents an application for review of judgment within the ordinary period limited for appealing, the time occupied by the Court in disposing of such application will not be reckoned among the days limited for appealing, but will be added thereto and a memorandum of appeal presented within such extended period will be received as presented within time." It is not disputed in the present case that if the time occupied by the application for review is deducted the appeal would be in time. The only question is as to whether the application for review fulfilled the conditions laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. The question was also discussed at considerable length by Mr. Justice Mukerji in the case of Gobinda Lal

Das v. Shiba Das Chatterjee (4). After discussing the Full Bench case referred to by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee and exhaustively discussing all the cases on the point he laid down the rule as follows (at page 1329*) "where, on the other hand, a party has bona fide presented an application for review of judgment and upon such application notice has been issued to the opposite party, the applicant ought not to be deprived of the benefit of the principle laid down in the Full Bench cases, because after hearing both sides, the Court comes to the conclusion that there are no good grounds for a review." Later on the learned Judge says (at page 1330*). "Taking all the cases together, the rule, which may be fairly deduced therefrom, appears to be that a bona fide application for review of judgment presented and prosecuted with due diligence should, except in special cases, be regarded as a sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed period." It appears, therefore, all that the appellant has to show is that he prosecuted the review application with due diligence and that there were reasonable grounds for filing such an application for review. If these conditions are fulfilled and the Court either ignores this rule and decides the questions upon the grounds which are in disregard of or are inconsistent with the rule so laid down then, in the words of the Judicial Committee in the case which I have already cited, the learned Judge has misdirected himself as to the law to be applied to the case. And although the question to be decided was a question as to the discretion to be exercised under s. 5 of the Limitation Act, that discretion must be a discretion exercised not arbitrarily but on principles which govern the exercise of judicial discretion. The learned Judge, as I have pointed out, does not exercise his discretion, because he was unable to find that there were reasonable or proper grounds of review. As I read his judgment what he really means to say is that in his opinion the application for review had no prospect of success. But that is not the criterion for the decision of the question. If the petitioner exercised due diligence in filing and prosecuting his application and if it is shown that his application was bona fide and is based on reasonable ground then, according to the authority I have cited, he ought to have been allowed a deduction of the time occupied in prosecuting the review. In the present case, as I have already stated, after the application was filed notice was issued upon the opposite party, the time occupied from the date of the notice until the final disposal of the matter by the learned Munsif was entirely beyond the control of the appellant. So far as I know the practice of this Court, it has been always considered that the issue of notice by the Court upon the opposite party was sufficient evidence of the reasonableness of filing the application for review, and in such cases the time occupied in prosecuting the review has been deducted from the time which had elapsed between the date of the decree and the date of filing the appeal. This is also the rule which Mr. Justice Mukerji deduced from the cases. It is not necessary for the applicant for review to show as the learned Judge seems to me to demand that his application for review had a prospect of success as demanded by him. In fact the whole judgment of the learned Judge is devoted to a discussion of the merits of the review application. All that is needed is to find whether the application was bona fide and that applicant for review had reasonable grounds for filing the application for review, and that is all that the rule demands. It should be observed that an application for review of judgment on discovery of fresh evidence stands on a different footing than an application for review on the same materials. In a case like that the matter cannot be disposed of without hearing both parties. I think, therefore, that the judgment of the learned District Judge is erroneous, and he has failed to exercise his discretion on sound principles which govern the exercise of such discretion.

The learned Judge has found that "he (the appellant) was in fact prosecuting review application will what appears to have been quite adequate diligence for a time which if credited to him would render his appeal timely." Then notice was issued upon the opposite party and after hearing both parties the application was refused. Applying the principles above referred to, the appeal should have been held not barred and the learned Judge ought to have heard the appeal on the merits. I set aside, the decree of the learned District Judge and remit the

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s 28—Place of registration—Property included bona fide in sale-deed to give jurisdiction to particular Sub-Registrar—Fraud, absence of—Registration, validity of

In a proceeding for registration of a document the question of title to the property purporting to be conveyed by the document cannot be gone into. Section 28 of the Registration Act does not require anything more than the existence of a property within the jurisdiction of a particular Sub-Registrar in order to entitle him to register a document transferring that property. [p. 1043, col. 2; p. 1044, col. 1.]

Where a vendor in order to enable himself to register a sale-deed relating to certain property in the office of a particular Sub-Registrar obtains a conveyance in his own name of certain property situated within the jurisdiction of that Sub-Registrar and then includes it in the sale-deed executed by him, the registration of the sale-deed by that particular Sub-Registrar, in the absence of any intention to defraud, is perfectly valid. ### JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment. Shorn of the details, the plaintiff's case is that village Keri asli and dakhli including its Tola Bhagiya was the ancestral khairat property of three brothers, viz., Kinu Misra, Gopal Misra and Rupan Misra. Tola Bhagiya is one of the dakhli or dependent villages of Mouza Keri. It was let out in mokarrari by Rupan Misra and his co-sharers to one Prabhu Narayan Singh and others who granted a zarpeshgi lease, dated 7th April 1887, of their mokarrari right in favour of Bhawan Sahu and others. Defendant No. 6 is in possession of Tola Bhagiya of zarpeshgi under sale-deed, dated the 18th March 1909 (Ex. 13). The three brothers Kinu Misra, Gopal Misra and Rupan Misra are dead. Defendant No. 1 is the son of Kinu Misra, and defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are the sons of Gopal Misra.

On the 22nd May 1895, corresponding to Jeth 14th, 1952 Sambat, defendant No. 1 Janak Misra, son of Kinu Misra, Gopal Misra father of defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and Rupan Misra conveyed to plaintiff by a deed of sale (Ex. 3-A) the whole of village Keri including Tola Bhagiya and other appurtenant Tolas for a consideration of Rs. 8,900, and in pursuance of the said kabala delivered possession of the same to her. The plaintiff continued to be in peaceful possession of the disputed property and has been paying cesses to the Kumar of Tori, proprietor of the village. The plaintiff's husband Bahadur Sahu died in 1909, and she being a pardahnashin lady there was nobody to look after her interest properly. The defendants taking advantage of this began to instigate the tenants of Keri to stop paying rent to the plaintiff, and managed to have Tola Bhagiya mapped and recorded as an independent village and to have some five hamlets or Tolas which really appertain to Keri proper included in Tola Bhagiya. They wrongfully and fraudulently got their names recorded in the settlement papers. The plaintiff coming to know of this, preferred an objection under s. 83 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, which was, however, rejected. The Record of Rights was finally published in Keri on the 14th January and in Bhagiya on the 21st January 1916. After this publication the defendants dispossessed the plaintiff from the whole property in 1916. Upon these allegations the plaintiff claims her title under the registered kobala, dated the 22nd May 1895, and also by adverse possession to the whole of village Keri asli mai dakhli including its hamlets. She further seeks a declaration to the effect that Bhagiya is a mere Tola (hamlet) which appertains to village Keri, and is not an independent mouza; that the real boundaries of Bhagiya are those contained in the kabala of defendant No. 6 (Ex. 13), dated the 13th March 1909 and that the said defendant only is entitled to hold the area of Bhagiya which is covered by his kabala and that the remaining portion, which has been mapped as part of Bhagiya by the Revenue Authorities in course of the recent Cadastral Survey appertains to Keri proper. The plaintiff, therefore, prays for recovery of possession of Keri and its hamlets as detailed in the plaint, with the exception of the trees mentioned in Sch. A, together with mesne profits of the value of Rs. 2,400, from Sambat 1973 to 1975 and future mesne profits pendente lite.

Three sets of written statements were filed in the case: (1) by defendant No. 1 Janak Misra, (2) by defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and (3) by defendant No. 6 the zarpeshgidar. The allegations in the first two pleadings are substantially the same. They plead amongst other things that the suit is not maintainable by plaintiff, impugning the kabala of 1895 (Ex. 3-A) set up by the plaintiff as a forged and fraudulent transaction, that it is bad for defect of parties and is barred by limitation. They had no property at Ranchi and as such there was fraud in registration. Defendant No. 1 was gained over by plaintiff's husband Bahadur Sahu, who was a famous litigant. They had incurred no debts and the so-called creditors were creatures of Bahadur Sahu. Bhagiya has correctly been surveyed and mapped. Plaintiff never held possession of the property nor collected any rents from the tenants. Defendant No. 1 further contends that Bahadur Sahu was his agent (mukhtear-am), that he was entirely under his influence and executed a document in favour of Bahadur Sahu and his brother Binda Sahu on the representation that he would not have to part with possession of the property and that it would protect his interest in the same. Defendant No. 6 alleges that the mokarraridars Sham Karan Bharathi and others should have been made party to the suit, that Bhagiya has correctly been measured by the Revenue Authorities as an independent mouza, that the khairatdar of Keri is only entitled to get an annual rent of Rs. 5 from the mokarraridar of Bhagiya and that defendants Nos. 1 to 5 have all along been in possession of Keri and the plaintiff had no manner of title in or possession of the property. He pleads limitation and contends that the plaintiff cleverly managed to get her name recorded in course of the settlement proceeding in the district without being in possession of the property. He, however, does not appear to have taken any keen interest in the Court below and has not entered appearance in this Court. The real disputants are defendants Nos. 1 to 5, and the two written statements filed by them are mutatis mutandis the same. The following issues were framed in the Court below:—

- (1) "Has the plaintiff any cause of action?"
- (2) "Is the Court-fee paid insufficient?"
- (3) "Is the suit barred by limitation?"
- (4) "Is Bhagiya a Tola of village Keri with boundaries as stated in the kabala, dated the 22nd May 1895, or is it an independent village as stated by defendant No. 6?"
- (5) "Has the plaintiff acquired any right, title or interest in village Keri and Tola Bhagiya and other Tolas with the exception of the trees mentioned in the plaint by her alleged purchase?"
- (6) "Is the plaintiff entitled to get possession of the disputed property?"
- (7) "Is defendant No. 6 a mere zarpeshgidar of Bhagiya only?"
- (8) "Is the plaintiff entitled to get mesne profits? If so, how much?"
- (9) "To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?"
- (10) "Is the suit bad for defect of parties?"
- (11) "Is the suit maintainable by plaintiff?"
- (12) "Whether the kabala set up by the plaintiff is illegal? Does it affect the property conveyed thereby?"
- (13) "Was plaintiff's husband a mukhtear-am of the defendant? Did he commit any breach of faith in taking the above kabala? Is it binding on the defendants?"

Issue No. 2 is stated by the learned Subordinate Judge not to have been pressed by the defendants. Issue No. 10 has been decided in favour of the plaintiff. The remaining issues were decided against the plaintiff. In the result the Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The learned Subordinate Judge has considered issues Nos. 3, 5, 6, and 13 together. The plaintiff's title is based upon the kabala of the 22nd May 1895 (Ex. 3-A), and the first question is whether this kabala was executed by Rupan Misra and Janak Misra and Gopa Misra the predecessor-in-interest of defendants Nos. 2 to 5. The learned Subordinate Judge says that "as regards the genuineness of the kabala (Ex. 3-A) no express issue was laid down". He says that defendants Nos. 2 to 5, the sons of Gopal Misra, emphatically deny the genuineness of the deed and that the pleadings of defendant No. 1 Janak Misra as set forth in his written statement are "sufficiently vague," but, says the learned Subordinate Judge, taking together his pleadings and deposition he also challenges the execution of the deed. Thus, although no definite issue was framed as to the genuineness of the kabala, the learned Subordinate Judge has tried to deal with the question. He disposes of the witnesses called by the plaintiff to prove the execution of the deed by Rupan, Janak and Gopal with the remark that these witnesses are more or less creatures of the plaintiff's husband Bahadur Sahu and that most of them, though they say that the execution took place in their presence, did not subscribe themselves as witnesses to the deed. As regards the signatures of the executants upon the deed in question, he observes: "Though each of them purported to have signed baqalam khas (by his own pen) the three signatures were affixed evidently by the same pen and hand. It is beyond dispute that whoever he might have been, it was the one and the same person who signed the names of the three executants on the deed. Again, though similarity of handwriting is no criterion for testing the genuineness of a deed, my attention has been drawn by the plaintiff's Pleader to the signatures of those alleged executants appearing on certain registered mortgage-deeds (Exs. 4 to 4 C). But I must say that the signature of Rupan as affixed to the kalala does not resemble the one appearing on the mortgage-deed (Ex. 4)."

There is, however, no such observation as regards the signatures of the other two executants Gopal and Janak whose signatures also appear on the mortgage bonds (Exs. 4 to 4-C). The learned Subordinate Judge does definitely record a finding that Janak and Gopal or for the matter of that Rupan did not actually sign the deed in question.

He then refers to another circumstance throwing suspicion upon the transaction which is said to have resulted in the kalala in question and that is that Anwar Khan, who is said to have identified the executants and was before the Registrar both when this kalala and the mortgage-deed (Ex. 4) were admitted to registration, was Bahadur Sahu's gomashta.

In short, the learned Subordinate Judge has thrown out certain criticisms as regards the evidence adduced by the plaintiff to prove the execution of the kalala in question, but has not come to a definite finding that the kalala was not executed by Rupan, Gopal and Janak. That this is so will eminently appear from the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge upon the question of the execution of the kalala. He concludes his judgment upon this point in the following words:—

"In fact, the circumstances attending the execution of the kalala are extremely suspicious and the evidence regarding execution offered on behalf of the plaintiff should, therefore, be received with caution." True, but the learned Subordinate Judge stops here and does not give us his definite finding upon the point after examining the evidence in the case in the light of the above caution. A careful analysis of the evidence will show that there is no room for any suspicion as to the due execution of the deed in question by Rupan, Gopal and Janak. Two of the executants Rupan and Gopal are dead. Their heirs defendants Nos. 2 to 5 deny the execution of the kalala by them. Ramtahal Misra defendant No. 2, son of Gopal Misra, has examined himself to prove the negative and denies the signatures upon the kalala in question as being of his father and Gopal and his uncle Rupan. But is he competent to prove or disprove the signatures of Gopal and Rupan? He was 20 to 30 years of age on the 8th day of December 1920 when he was examined as a witness in the case. Therefore in 1895 he was a lad of nine years. He says in his evidence that he got discretion about 18 years ago, that is, in the year 1902. He nowhere makes himself competent to prove or disprove the signatures of Gopal and Rupan. In order to prove the handwriting or signature of another person one must show that he is acquainted with the handwriting or signature of that person. Ramtahal does not say a word about it in his evidence-in-chief. In cross-examination he gives up the show altogether, where he says.—

"I have no paper written by my father or uncle. I have no recollection of their handwriting. Their writing was of different style. I know how to read and write a little."

Janak Misra defendant No 1 has also examined himself in the case. He is 59 years of age and certainly he was associated with his brothers Rupan and Gopal in the management of his family affairs. He is supposed to be one of the executants of the bond. If there was anybody who was competent to speak about the signatures of Gopal and Rupan, it was Janak Misra. He, however, does not take the responsibility of denying their signatures upon the kabala in question. There is, therefore, though a denial in the written statement filed by defendants Nos. 2 to 5, no evidence in the case disproving or denying the signatures of Gopal and Rupan upon the kabala in question. Therefore the denial in the written statement is not substantiated and Janak's omission in the written statement to expressly deny the signatures is a proof positive that the signatures on the kabala in question, which purport to be of Gopal and Rupan, are theirs. Janak has not the hardihood of expressly denying in his written statement his own signature upon the kabala in question. His written statement, if carefully scrutinized is a tacit admission of the execution of the bond under the influence of Bahadur Sahu by means of inducements for the future benefit of Janak. No doubt, in paras. 7 and 10 he denies the genuineness and the correctness of the deed. In para. 16 he says that the plaintiff's husband Bahadur Sahu and his brother Binda Sahu exercised complete influence and control over him (Janak) and under their advice and instructions he signed on plain papers, and perhaps the kabala in question is one of such papers. In para. 21 he says "so far as the defendant No. 1 recollects it is this that the said Bahadur Sahu once proposed to him that it was proper for him to execute such a bond as would prevent (him) from contracting debts and if any debt came to light, the same could be used against it: that there would be no change in his possession and occupation and that it would be within his power to get the same set aside if he had any objection. If the bond in suit is in reality that very (instrument) which was executed under the advice and instruction of the said Bhadur and Binda Shah, the defendant No. 1 was duped to execute it under fraud, but the contents of the bond in suit are certainly not those of the bond whose execution was (once contemplated)."

Therefore, whereas he starts with the denial as to the execution of the bond he tacitly admits that he executed the instrument in question under the advice and instruction of Bahadur Sahu and Binda Sahu for the purposes mentioned in para. 21 of his written statement. According to him, he did execute such an instrument. No other instrument has been filed in the case or shown in evidence to have been executed by him as suggested in para. 21. Therefore, conclusively the kabala in question is the instrument referred to in para. 21 and, therefore, the execution of the kabala is admitted, though it is said to have been executed under fraud and circumstances that effect should not be given to it. This has been his substantial plea as disclosed in his evidence. He says in his evidence that he had imposed great confidence in Bahadur Sahu who had a power of attorney in his favour (Ex. F), dated the 14th December 1880, and that he used to manage his Keri property, which is the subject-matter of dispute in this case. Considering all the circumstances the learned Subordinate Judge stigmatizes the defence of Janak Misra as set forth in his written statement as being vague.

Now, as regards his signature upon the bond, the attitude of Janak Misra in the box has been to deny all his signatures on any paper whatsoever. He went so far as to deny his verification and signature on his written statement filed in this case. Upon this the Court remarked. "The man appears to be a fool." This pulled him up and he immediately admitted his signature upon the verification on the written statement. The Court records his deposition thus—" (Then says) I signed it myself." He says "Bahadur Sahu was my karpardaz. He might have had the kabala fraudulently signed by me. I used to sign blank paper occasionally. Exhibit 3-A does not contain our signatures." The signature of Janak Misra upon the verification on his written statement filed in this case which is now his admitted signature and that upon the kabala in question are manifestly similar. We have carefully compared the signatures of Rupan, Gopal and Janak on the kabala in question and on the previous documents (Exs. 4 to 4-E) from 1838 to 1891. The signatures, not only appearing as executants of the document in question but also those made before the Sub-Registrar in all those documents, appear to be similar; that is, Rupan's signatures on all these documents are similar, so are of Gopal and Janak Misra respectively. They have got peculiar ways of writing, particularly Janak. His letters are of a peculiar style and even a superficial look at them would not fail to impress one with their similarity. These signatures were examined by the learned Vakil Mr. P. C. Roy on behalf of the respondents and he conceded that the signatures are similar. The learned Subordinate Judge is entirely wrong when he says that the signatures of the three executants were written by the same pen and hand. The signatures of the three executants Rupan, Gopal and Janak are in different style altogether. The learned Subordinate Judge has overlooked the signatures of these executants before the Registrar. These signatures could not be by one and the same person, but must have been by three different persons. The documents bear their thumb-impressions. The thumb-impressions are not of one and the same person. They are evidently of three different persons. The suspicion lurking in the mind of the learned Subordinate Judge was that one and the same person signed the documents for all the three brothers. This is obviously wrong. There is direct evidence in the case of a number of witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff, who swore to the execution of the kabala by the three brothers. The learned Subordinate Judge brushes them aside upon the ground that they are servants or relations of Bahadur Sahu, husband of the plaintiff but it is common knowledge that a vendee always wants to have his own men as witnesses to the sale-deed. All the marginal witnesses of the kabala, except Piru Khan, are dead, and the plaintiff has examined him. No reason has been given by the Court below why his evidence should not be accepted. Upon a careful consideration of the evidence and giving our best consideration to the criticisms of the learned Subordinate Judge we have unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that the document in question was executed by Rupan, Gopal and Janak.

The learned Subordinate Judge then addresses himself as to the consideration for the kabala. The consideration for the kabala is Rs. 8,900, and the necessity is recited in it to be as follows:—

	Rs.	a.	p.
(1) In order to pay Anwar Khan decree holder of Ranchi against the executants in respect of a Civil Court decree, principal and interest	1,804	3	10
(2) The amount due under a mortgage-bond dated the 2nd February 1891, with principal and interest executed by Rupan, Gopal and Janak, in favour of Birinda Sahu, which on account of the partition has fallen to the share of the purchaser's husband Bahadur Sahu	4,915	12	2
(3) The amount due to Dasrath Chowbey from the executants	100	0	0
(4) The amount due to Dudh Gojhu and	280	0	0
(5) The amount to be paid in cash to the executants	1,800	0	0
Total	8,900	0	0

The plaintiff has produced the earlier bonds said to have been paid off out of the consideration money by her. She has also given documentary evidence to prove the satisfaction of the Civil Court decree of Anwar Khan against the executants through her. Exhibit 4-C is a mortgage bond executed by Janak Misra in favour of Dwarka Sahu. The endorsement on the back of it shows that the money was paid and the bond was returned to the plaintiff. It was also torn in token of satisfaction. This bond recites of a decree obtained by Dwarka Sahu in 1887 against Janak Misra with respect to certain zarpeshgi lease of 4-annas of Mouza Keri. In order to satisfy that decree the mortgage-bond (Ex. 4-C) was executed by Janak Misra.

Exhibit 4-D is a mortgage-bond mortgaging 8-annas out of 16-annas of Mouza Keri executed by Janak Misra in favour of Girdhari Ram Pandey, dated the 8th May 1890. This also bears the similar endorsement of payment through the plaintiff as "purchaser of Mouza Keri."

Exhibit 7 is a compromise decree, dated the 5th January 1888, obtained by Dwarka

Sahu against Janak Misra and his brothers.

Exhibit 4 (B) is a mortgage-bond executed by Rupan Misra, Gopal Misra and Janak Misra in favour of Dukhan Gojhu, dated the 9th January 1891. This also bears the endorsement of Rs. 200 having been paid by the plaintiff as purchaser of Mouza Keri.

Exhibit 4 is the mortgage-bond executed by Rupan, Gopal and Janak in favour of Birinda Sahu, dated the 2nd January 1891. In this bond the entire Mouza Keri asli and dakhli with the Tolas known as Sarham Tola, Masur Tola, Dudhmatia Tola, Kandra Tola, Koota Tola, Salichanwa Tola and Barwa Tola lying in Mouza Keri, were mortgaged to Birinda Sahu, brother of Bahadur Sahu husband of the plaintiff. This bond by partition had fallen to the share of Bahadur Sahu, and was satisfied out of the consideration money of the kabala in question. The bond is dated the 2nd February 1891.

Now only three months after the kabala on the 16th August 1895, a petition (Ex. 15-A) was filed showing satisfaction of the money due under the decree held by Anwar Khan.

These payments are further shown in the jamakharch book (Ex. 9-B) filed on behalf of the plaintiff for the years 1895-96. The criticisms of the learned Subordinate Judge as regards seaha jamakharch (Ex. 9-H) seem to be hypocritical. The learned Subordinate Judge has lost sight of the stubborn fact that Rupan, Gopal and Janak had debts outstanding against them from 1887, if not earlier, and the connection of Janak Misra with Bahadur Sahu has not been traced prior to 1880 as evidenced by the power-of-attorney (Ex. F). That power-of-attorney only empowered Bahadur Sahu, husband of the plaintiff as an agent to register jointly or singly on behalf of Janak Misra deeds before the Sub-Registrar at Lohardagga and to receive them back after registration. The learned Subordinate Judge evolved out of this simple power-of-attorney a complete control exercised by Bahadur Sahu over Janak Misra. But what has he to say about Rupan and Gopal between whom and Bahadur Sahu no sort of connection has been established, even of principal and agent as in the case of Janak? They were owners of 2/3rds of Mouza Keri and they joined with Janak in the execution of the kabala in question. A single incident, such as the holding of power-of-attorney from Janak Misra to register his deeds before the Sub Registrar of Lohardagga, would not invalidate or cast any suspicion upon transactions of such a grave nature as the kabala in question, the necessity whereof is supported by the undoubted testimony of prior mortgage bonds and debts which the family had to satisfy. The learned Subordinate Judge has launched into imagination in order to throw suspicion upon the kabala in question. As in the case of execution, so in the case of the consideration of the kabala the learned Subordinate Judge does not come to a definite finding. Transactions if questioned after a number of years may give rise to various criticisms, such as those the learned Subordinate Judge has levelled against the kabala in question. No evidence has been given—oral or documentary—to show that Bahadur Sahu played fowl with Janak Misra or with Rupan and Gopal. Why should we not then accept that there existed cordial relationship between Janak Misra and Bahadur Sahu, and that Bahadur Sahu was always willing to render service to the family so much so that his brother Birinda Sahu advanced large sums of money in 1888 in order to pay off the debts of the family and to save them from pecuniary stringencies. We have it in evidence, notably Exs. 4 to 4 (D) and the Court proceedings in connection with the execution of decrees, that the family had reached a financial crisis and either the family was to be ruined on account of the decrees and execution proceedings then pending against it or it had to be saved. Who came to the rescue at such a critical moment? The learned Subordinate Judge has not addressed himself to this point. It was Bahadur Sahu who managed to advance money either himself or through his wife, either his own money or that of his wife, which point will be considered later on and he did take an active part in saving the family from ruin. He advanced money, paid off all the debts for we do not hear of any debt now outstanding against the family. His connection throughout seems to be fair. If he was an agent he was a faithful agent. It is needless to pursue this question further and to reply seriatim the imaginative arguments of the learned Subordinate Judge. Suffice it to say that our careful examination of the evidence, the facts and circumstances in the case have led to the conclusion that the bond was executed for consideration and that the entire consideration money was paid off, Rs. 1,800 was paid in cash at the time of registration as is noted on the document itself. The document cannot be impugned as being without consideration. It was duly executed by Rupan, Gopal and Janak for good consideration. Therefore, the document created a valid title in favour of the vendee with respect to the property purported to have been conveyed by it.

Now, did possession follow title in the present case? The document was executed in 1895, and the evidence of possession from 1895 up to 1909 or 1910 appears to be one-sided. The defendants do not seem to have any possession over the property after the execution of the sale-deed in question until they succeeded in dispossessing the plaintiff. If neither title nor possession passed, we would expect evidence of actual possession by the vendors and their family over the property in question not after 1909 or 1910 or after the survey in 1916 but right through from 1895 uninterrupted up to the present moment. This break in the possession of the vendors just after the execution of the kabala in 1895 for a considerable number of years supports the plaintiff's case of the possession having passed to her in pursuance of the kabala in question. Add to it the positive evidence of possession, documentary and oral, given on behalf of the plaintiff from 1895 up to her dispossession. Exhibit 9 series are jamakharch book and seaha bahis which show income from the village in question and expenditure. These are from 1895 to 1909-1910. There are kabuliyats (Exs. 12 and 12-A) executed by some tenants in favour of the plaintiff in 1895-1896. Then we come to the Court proceedings. The plaintiff Jasoda Kuer had been realizing rents through Courts: vide plaints 21, 21-A, judgment Ex 18 and decree Ex. 19-B. Now, Janak Misra himself admitted the possession of the plaintiff Jasoda Kuer in the plaint (Ex. 21), dated the 1st November 1900, wherein he claimed to recover the cess paid by him to the superior landlord. The plaint recites that the vendors had khairat or kushbrit lakhiraj interest in the village granted under a santid by the ancestor of the Todi Raj Sri Maharaj Udai Nath Sahi Deo through their ancestors. The village was a sort of jagir or maintenance grant granted to the junior member of the family of the Maharaja. The khairat lakhirajdar had to pay cesses to the landlord. Janak Misra and the other defendants sons of Gopal and Rupan, claimed these cesses which were paid by them to the superior landlord from Musammatt Jasoda Kuer the plaintiff, upon the ground stated in para. 1 of the plaint that under the registered sale-deed, dated the 22nd May 1895, executed by Rupan, Gopal and Janak the khairat lakhiraj interest in the village was transferred to Musammatt Jasoda Kuer. Exhibit 22 is the order-sheet in that case. In September of 1901 Janak Misra filed a petition before the Manager, Encumbered Estate, Palamau, in answer to a notice issued upon him and his uncles Rupan and Gopal, to pay cesses. In that petition (Ex. 2-F) he admitted that the village was sold by him and his brothers to the plaintiff by the sale-deed, dated the 22nd May 1895. On the 7th November 1901 he put in a petition before the Manager that no rent is payable, the village being lakhiraj, but only cesses were payable (Ex. 1). The order of the Manager (Ex. 1-I), dated the 2nd February 1902 upheld the contention of Bahadur Sahu that the village was lakhiraj and that cesses only were paid and that Janak Misra had paid up to 1936, that is before the kabala and since then Bahadur Sahu had paid. That cess is payable to the superior landlord is also stated in the kabala (Ex. 3 A). It is said that Rs. 12-2-8 is payable to Kumar Saheb, the proprietor of pargana Todi. It appears that after the sale the payment of the cess was made on behalf of the plaintiff. Exhibit 5, order of the Manager, dated the 3rd May 1904, referred to Ajodhya Misra, the ancestor of Rupan, Gopal and Janak, being the original khairatdar, who transferred the plaintiff Musammatt Jasoda Kuer, wife of Bahadur Sahu, the property by sale-deed, dated the 22nd May 1895, and the Musammatt was ordered to be recorded under s. 31 (2) of Act VI of 1879 as being in possession of the property. The order further reserved the right of the zemindar to resumption as enjoined by sub-s. (6) (II) of the Act.

Exhibit 6 series, receipts for cess granted by the Manager, show the rents paid by Bahadur Sahu and the names of Janak Misra and Musammatt Jasoda Kuer as tenants. Janak Misra's name was retained as he was the original khairatdar and Musammatt Jasoda Kuer's name was added as she was the purchaser. These receipts are from 1962 to 1965 (1906 to 1909). The counterfoil receipts (Exs. 8 to 8 H) from 1905 to 1909 show the name of Musammāt Jasoda Kuer, wife of Bahadur Sahu, as ilāqadar or zemin-dar of the mouza and that rent was received from the tenants. Exhibits 8 H, 8-D, 8-E and 8-F counterfoil rent receipts have been signed by Janak Misra as tenant. These documents clearly show that Musammāt Jasoda Kuer was recognized as purchaser of the mouza and had been in possession of it from 1895 to 1909 or 1910, and that Janak Misra recognized her possession, took part in having her name mutated in the superior landlord's serishta and also signed some of the counterfoils.

Bahadur Sahu, husband of the plaintiff, died in 1909, and then the trouble seems to have arisen in the possession of the lady. Janak Misra seems now to have disturbed the possession of the Musammāt. The first move was to dissuade the tenants from paying 16-annas rent to the lady and when the lady refused, the tenants applied in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Palamau to deposit 8-annas share of rent thereby implying that she was entitled only to 8 annas of the property vide Ex 2-A.

In 1910 there was a proceeding under s 107 of the Cr. P. C. The first party were the servants of one Mr. Pickard who held a lease of village Keri and the second party were the servants of Musammāt Jasoda Kuer plaintiff who purchased the village under the kabala executed in the year 1895. In 1912 Musammāt Jasoda Kuer brought a suit against Janak Misra for realization of rent, as Janak was also a tenant of the village. He pleaded that he was a tenant of Ramtahal who was 8-annas proprietor of Mouza Keri and that he never paid rent to the plaintiff.

Soon after this, settlement operations began, and the whole dispute has been detailed in Ex. 11, report of the Assistant Settlement Officer, dated the 12th February 1915. Before him were filed most of the documents filed in this case to prove the title and possession of the Musammāt ever since she purchased the property up to date. The Assistant Settlement Officer in the dispute list (Ex. 17), dated the 11th April 1915, says that from the documents filed before him, namely, the collection papers, it was clearly proved that the kabala of 22nd May 1895 was not a benami transaction as alleged by Janak Misra and others, but that it was a bona fide sale and that possession passed to Musammāt Jasoda Kuer by virtue of that kabala, and that she remained in undisturbed possession of the village and was in receipt of rent from the rai-yats and that the dispute about possession arose in 1966 Sambat (1909) "In that year", continues the Assistant Settlement Officer, rent was collected khās from certain rai-yats by the Musammāt and nine of the rai-yats deposited very small portions of their rents in the treasury in favour of the Musammāt. In 1967 (1910) the Musammāt was unable to make any khās collection in the village. Twelve of the rai-yats deposited very small portions of their rents in the treasury in favour of the Musammāt and the rest of the rai-yats presumably paid their rents to the Misras. In 1968 (1911) also the Musammāt was unable to make any khās collection. Two of the rai-yats deposited very small portions of their rents in the treasury in her favour. In 1969 (1912) and subsequent years there was neither any khās collection by the Musammāt nor any deposit of rent in her favour."

Thus, the learned Assistant Settlement Officer came to the conclusion that the Musammāt was practically dispossessed by the Misras in 1910, although the dispossession was illegal, inasmuch as the Musammāt was the rightful owner or proprietress of the village by virtue of the kabala of 22nd May 1895. Upon this finding the present entry in the settlement Record of Rights was made, that is, the Musammāt was held to be the rightful owner of the village in question and the Misras, the defendants, as trespassers and in wrongful possession for five or six years after 1910. What was before the Assistant Settlement Officer is before us, and the Assistant Settlement Officer seems to have fully appreciated the situation. The evidence before us had confirmed us in our conviction that the Musammāt is the rightful owner of the property in dispute and has been in possession up to 1910 when disturbance began on behalf of the Misras, the defendants, and she was completely dispossessed about that time. Janak Misra had not produced any collection papers before the Assistant Settlement Officer, nor has he been able to produce any before us before 1910.

The conclusion to which we have arrived at in disagreement with the view of the Subordinate Judge is that the kabala in question is a genuine document and was duly executed by Rupan, Gopal and Janak. It was given effect to and the title passed to the plaintiff and that she obtained possession thereunder in 1895 just after the deed was executed and she continued to be in possession until she was dispossessed as stated above. The suit was instituted on the 16th May 1919 well within time for recovery of possession. This disposes of Issue No. 3, which relates to limitation.

Incidentally I may say a few words as regards Issue No. 13. This issue does not seem to have been drawn up artistically. The plaintiff's husband held a power-of-attorney from Janak Misra (Ex. F), dated the 14th December 1880, and, as already observed, this power-of-attorney was with a view to save the trouble of the principal going to the Registration Office for registering her document. The evidence is not convincing as to Bahadur Sahu being a general mukhtear am having a general power-of-attorney for all kinds of business to be transacted on behalf of the defendants. He had no special power-of-attorney of any sort from defendants Nos. 2 to 4 or their ancestors Rupan and Gopal. No evidence has been given in this case of any breach of faith having been committed by Bahadur Sahu with respect to the kabala in question. If Bahadur Sahu was a shrewd man, as the Subordinate Judge calls him, Janak Misra appears to be equally shrewd for just after the death of Bahadur Sahu he began to manipulate all kinds of measures, proper or improper, in order to disturb the possession of the lady. He set up some of the tenants to say that the plaintiff had only 8 annas share in the village and that the remaining 8-annas was held by Ramtabal Misra. He himself in the suit brought for rent by the Musammatt said that he was holding under Ramtabal Misra, proprietor of 8-annas share. He did not deny in that case that the Musammatt had no title to the village under the kabala in question. He took advantage of the plaintiff being a pardahnashin woman and wholly dispossessed her by the time the Assistant Settlement Officer dealt with the village in 1915, and he succeeded in maintaining his, what the Assistant Settlement Officer calls, illegal possession as a trespasser in the village and had his name recorded as such. If we are right in our view that he solemnly executed the deed of sale and received consideration and gave possession of it to the vendee, he was re-paying the faithful services of Bahadur Sahu, by manipulating deceitful means res against her. No case of fraud and undue influence has been made out and no facts and circumstances sufficient to raise such a plea been definitely averred in the written statement or proved. The last portion of this issue "Is it binding on the defendants" has already been answered. The defendant No. 1 and the predecessor-in-interest of defendants, Nos. 2 to 5 executed the sale-deed in question and the kabala is, therefore, binding upon the defendants.

The next question would then naturally arise as is set forth in Issue No. 6—"Is the plaintiff entitled to get possession of the disputed property?" The answer to this would have been a very simple one after what has been said above had it not been for Issue No. 12 "Whether the kabala which has been set up by the plaintiff is illegal? Does it affect the property conveyed thereby?" Therefore before Issue No. 6 is answered, Issue No. 12 must be disposed of. Under this issue the learned Subordinate Judge has decided that the Sub-Registrar of Ranchi, who registered the document, acted without jurisdiction, inasmuch as the vendors Rupan, Gopal and Janak had no property within the jurisdiction of the Ranchi, Sub-Registry. Now, the properties conveyed by the sale-deed are the properties in dispute Mouza Keri and its Tolas (dependent hamlets and a portion of a house situate in Ranchi. Mouza Keri appertains to Palamau District and is outside the Ranchi District. According to the finding of the Subordinate Judge village Keri is 85 miles from Daltonganj and 40 miles from Ranchi. The executants of the bonds are residents of Mouza Keri. The vendee Musammatt Jasoda Kuer and her husband Bahadur Sahu were residents of Mouza Harhanj in the District of Palamu, about 48 miles off. The house in question stood in the name of Liladhar Misra, am-mukhtear of Bahadur Sahu, and Ganpat Sahu brother-in-law of Bahadur Sahu. The house originally belonged to a Kumhar, who conveyed the same to Liladhar and Ganpat on the 25th of June 1883. Deocharan, brother of Liladhar, executed a kabala (Ex. 3) claiming half the share jointly with Liladhar in the house in question on the 22nd May 1895, wherein he claimed that he along with his brother Liladhar had half share in the house which was purchased in the name of Liladhar and Ganpat, and he sold one of the rooms of that house roofed with tiles said to be in his possession for a sum of Rs. 10 to Janak Misra one of the executants of the sale-deed in question (Ex. 3 A). The two sale-deeds (Exs. 3 and 3-A) were presented to the Sub-Registrar of Ranchi for registration almost simultaneously between 2 and 3 p. m. and they were registered. The sale-deed (Ex. 3) relating to the house bears No. 2,630 for 1895 entered in Book I, Vol. 19, at pages 87-88. The sale-deed (Ex. 3-A) relating to Mouza Keri in dispute bears No. 2632 for 1895 entered in Book I, Vol. 13, at pages 275-279. Janak Misra in whose favour a portion of the house in Ranchi was sold by Ex. 3 did not intend to keep the house to himself, for immediately he conveyed the same by means of the sale-deed (Ex. 3-A) to Musammam Jasoda Kuer. Therefore the sale-deed (Ex. 3) was executed with a view to give him title to the house situate in Ranchi in order that the sale-deed (Ex. 3-A) with respect to Mouza Keri be presented for registration and registered in Ranchi. Neither of the parties lived either at Ranchi or at Daltonganj, and the distance from their respective residences to Daltonganj was almost double. Obviously they thought it convenient to have the document registered at Ranchi instead of at Daltonganj, as 45 miles in that part of the country is an inconvenient distance to travel for ordinary people not having good conveyance at their disposal, the country being covered by hills and jungle. This in itself is not a dishonest motive and might in the circumstances be a good motive to avoid going to Daltonganj. In the present case nothing has been shown why the parties would avoid having the document registered at Daltonganj, except the one ground referred to above. No circumstance has been shown to indicate that the parties wanted to avoid the publicity of the registration of the sale-deed (Ex. 3-A) in the Daltongani District. There is nothing to show that they wanted to defeat or defraud any creditor or that they had any other sinister motive. Therefore the fact that Janak got the sale-deed executed in his favour by Deocharan with respect to the house in Ranchi would not in itself affect the registration of the document provided it was a bona fide deed with a view to carry out the intentions of the parties in executing and registering the sale-deed (Ex. 3-A) in Ranchi with respect to Mouza Keri. It is said that Deocharan had no interest in the house and that the house belonged to Bahadur Sahu and that he was the real purchaser under a sale-deed, dated the 25th

June 1883 from a Kumhar in the farzi name of his am-mukhtear Liladhar Misra and his brother-in-law Ganpat Sahu. In support of this reference is made to Ex.-A, sale-deed executed by Bahadur Sahu in favour of Akhourri Sundar Behari Lal, dated the 19th March 1902, several years after the kabala in question (Ex. 3-A). In that sale-deed Bahadur Sahu recites that he had purchased the house in question under a registered sale-deed, dated the 25th June 1883, with his own funds farzi in the name of his mukhtear-am Liladhar Misra and his brother-in-law Ganpat Sahu, and that he disposed of it to Akhourri Sundar Behari Lal for Rs. 125. Deocharan Misra, brother of Liladhar Misra, on the other hand, in the sale-deed (Ex. 3) stated that he was a co-sharer with Liladhar in the house in question and that he owned and possessed one of the rooms of that house and that he sold that off to Janak Misra per sale-deed (Ex. 3) on the 22nd May 1895. Bahadur Sahu took part in the execution of the sale-deed (Ex. 3-A) in favour of his wife, the plaintiff in the case. The deed confirmed the sale of the house by Deocharan to Janak by Ex. 3. Bahadur Sahu, therefore, allowed the property to be sold by Deocharan Misra in favour of Janak Misra. The sale-deed of the 25th June 1883 in favour of Liladhar Misra and Gopal Sahu on the face of it shows that Liladhar Misra had interest, and Deocharan is brother of Liladhar. Therefore upon the document as it stands it cannot be said that Liladhar or Deocharan had no title to the house in question. According to the tenor of the document and the relationship that existed between Deocharan and Liladhar, the former would appear to have title to the house in question which he purported to convey by the sale deed (Ex. 3) to Janak. In a proceeding for registration of a document title to property cannot be gone into. There was a property, namely, the house situate within the Ranchi District and the Sub-Registrar of Ranchi had jurisdiction to register the document relating to the house in question. Deocharan Misra purported by kabala (Ex. 3) to sell a portion of that house to Janak Misra, and Janak Misra, therefore, under that sale-deed acquired an ostensible title which he forthwith conveyed by Ex. 3-A to the plaintiff. Section 28 of the Indian Registration Act does not require anything more than the existence of a property within the jurisdiction of a particular Sub-

Registrar in order to entitle him to register the same: Ram Dai v. Ram Chandrabali Debi (1). The cases cited are distinguishable. In the case of Harendra Lal Roy v. Hari Dasi Debi (2) the property mentioned in the mortgage bond in question was a fictitious property. It had no existence in Calcutta, and, therefore, under s. 28 the registration of the document was invalid. In the case of Mathura Prasad v. Chandra Narain Chowdhury (3) the sale-deed with respect to 2 bighas, 1 katha in Kalhua in the District of Muzaffarpur, which purported to give title to a party to a mortgage in order to entitle the registration thereof in the District of Muzaffarpur was not produced nor was it shown that there was delivery of possession by virtue of the sale-deed. In that case it was found that to the knowledge of both parties the mortgagor had no title to that property and that he never intended to part with that property. In those circumstances the registration of the document in the District of Muzaffarpur was held to be inoperative having been registered outside the Registration Law. The circumstances of this case are quite different from any of those cases. The first case obviously does not apply, inasmuch as the house in the District of Ranchi is not a fictitious property. The second case does not apply, inasmuch as on the face of the previous sale-deed of the 25th June 1883, Liladhar Misra brother of Deocharan Misra had title to the property, and Bahadur Sahu who took part in the execution of both the sale-deeds (Exs. 3 and 3-A) led Janak Misra to believe that Deocharan had title to the house and did not disclose his own title if any. Therefore, these decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee do not apply to the present case. The vendees themselves took part in the transaction regarding the registration of the documents (Exs. 3 and 3-A) and cannot be permitted to take this plea.

We, therefore, hold in disagreement with the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge that the document in question is not illegal on account of its having been registered by the Sub-Registrar of Ranchi. The Issue No. 12 having been thus answered, the answer to Issue No. 6 is obvious; and that answer is in the affirmative.

The plaintiff is entitled to get possession of the disputed property. The plaintiff's title is fortified in this case by the fact that she had been in possession of the property for over 12 years from 1895 to 1909. Her possession was to the knowledge of Janak Misra who had taken part in the exercise of right of possession by the plaintiff, some of the counterfoils having been signed by himself. She, therefore, acquired an absolute title to the property by adverse possession for over 12 years, having exercised it openly and adversely to the knowledge of the defendants. Therefore, even if the registration of the document was illegal, the title acquired by her by adverse possession remains intact, and the defendants have no right to dispossess her in the manner in which they did in the year 1910 or thereafter.

The obvious result of these findings is that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed in the suit, and the suit must be decreed.

The next question is the extent of the decree to be given in favour of the plaintiff. Her case in short is that she is entitled to get possession of all the properties in Mouza Keri with Tola Bhagiya and the other Tolas appertaining thereto and that the survey entry recording some of the Tolas as appertaining to Bhagiya as distinct from Mouza Keri is wrong. This issue has not much concern with defendants Nos. 2 to 5, but only defendant No. 6. Defendant No. 6, as already observed in the earlier part of the judgment, has not taken keen interest in the litigation and did not contest the plaintiff's claim either here or in the Court below though he filed a written statement, and in this appeal he has not entered appearance. It appears that the sale-deed of 1909 (Ex. 13) filed in this case describes the extent of the property to which the defendant No. 6 is entitled as zarfeshgidar of the mokarrari interest in that village. He is not entitled to hold possession of more than what that document gives him. Therefore the plaintiff is entitled to take khas possession of all the properties, except Tola Bhagiya, as described and detailed in the deed of 1909 (Ex. 13). This again was a clever move on the part of Janak Misra to have a large quantity of

The result is that the judgment of the Court below is reversed and the decree is set aside, and the plaintiff's suit is decreed with costs throughout. The plaintiff will also be entitled to get mesne profits prior to the suit from defendants Nos. 1 to 5. The amount will be determined in a subsequent proceeding. She will get mesne profits also pendente lite as also for the subsequent period up to the date of delivery of possession or three years from the date of the decree of this Court, whichever event occurs first.

RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 23
—Trial Court, findings of, on all issues—Order of remand for further evidence on some issues only—Jurisdiction.

An order of remand by a Court of Appeal in a case where the Trial Court has disposed itself of all the issues and given a decree on those findings cannot come within the scope of O. XLI, r. 23, C. P. C., and is, therefore, not appealable.

Muppavaraju Venkata Radhakrishna Rao v. Venthurumilli Venkatarao, 84 Ind. Cas. 935, (1924) M. W. N. 922, 47 M. L. J. 552, 20 L. W. 711, 35 M. L. T. 135, A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 229, 48 M. L. J. 713, followed.

A Court of Appeal acts without jurisdiction if it remands "the whole case" while it wants further evidence only on two issues. The proper course in such circumstances is to direct the Trial Court to take the requisite further evidence and submit it to the Appellate Court for recording its own findings.

Appeal against, and petition under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act in the alternative to revise an order of the Court of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Tinnevely, dated the 30th October 1924, in A. S. No.

199 of 1924, preferred against a decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Tinnevely, in O. S. No. 17 of 1923.

Mr. M. S. Vaithinatha Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs K. S. Champakesa Aiyangar and V. C. Gopalaratnam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It has been argued before us that no appeal lies in this case. We are clear that an order of remand in case where the Trial Court has disposed itself of all the issues and given a decree on those findings cannot come within the scope of O. XLI, r. 23, and that, therefore, no appeal lies. Certain decisions of this Court have been cited before us to the effect that the order of remand must be deemed to have been passed, though improperly passed, under O. XLI, r. 23 and that, therefore, an appeal lies, but no decision quoted has the effect of overruling the view we took in a similar case, Muppavaraju Venkata Radhakrishna Rao v. Venthurumilli Venkatarao (1) which we see no reason at present to abandon. We hold, therefore, that no appeal lies. The appeal against order is dismissed. In the civil revision petition we are confined to the question whether the Subordinate Judge exceeded or improperly exercised his jurisdiction in the order under revision. That order displays several inconsistencies and is obscure in its purport. The Subordinate Judge holds at one stage, e. g., that 3rd defendant is not a necessary party and yet remands the case retaining him on the record. Again at another stage he remands "the whole case" while he lays down that only issues Nos 5 and 6 are to be re-tried. He does not say wherefrom he gets a jurisdiction to remand the whole case for re-trial merely because he wishes further evidence on those issues, particularly when the Trial Court has considered those issues on the evidence which was put in before it and recorded its findings thereon. It appears to us that the Subordinate Judge's order was made without jurisdiction and that the proper course in the circumstances was for him to direct the principal District Munsif to take the further evidence he wished and submit it to his Court, whereon he would record his own finding. We set aside the order of remand and direct that the decision of the principal District Munsif stand, and that the District Judge do call for any further evidence he requires and on its receipt decide the appeal de novo for himself. We would make it clear that the lower Appellate Court's decision that the 3rd defendant is not a necessary party falls to the ground along with the reversal of its order and is, therefore, still open for decision at the re-hearing of the appeal. The civil revision petition is allowed to this extent. There will be no order as to costs either in the civil revision petition or the appeal against order.

Whether an acknowledgment of a debt was executed in order to supply evidence of such debt or was a mere note or extract of accounts cannot be decided on the terms of document alone. Therefore, if such document is unstamped it cannot be held to be inadmissible in evidence without taking oral evidence as to the purpose for which it was executed.

Surjumull Murlidhar Chandick v. Ananta Lal Damani, 74 Ind. Cas. 1029, 46 M. 948, 45 M. L. J. 399; 18 L. W. 485; (1923) M. W. N. 743, A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 352, relied upon.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise a decree of the Court of Small Causes at Tanjore, dated the 10th October 1923, in S. C. S. No. 542 of 1922.

Mr. R. Sethurama Sastri, for the Petitioner.

Mr. A. V. Viswanatha Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The point at issue in this petition is whether the lower Court was right in ruling that a "rokha" which plaintiff wanted to file was inadmissible in evidence because unstamped. The 'rokha,' in my view, is certainly an acknowledgment of a debt of Rs. 250 due to plaintiff by defendant and is signed by him, and was left in plaintiff's possession. It contains no promise to pay the debt or any stipulation to pay interest or to deliver property. The only factor remaining, by which it may be brought within Art. 1 of the First Schedule of the Stamp Act is whether it was obtained in order to supply evidence of such debt. Plaintiff argues that it was not obtained for that purpose because it is a mere note or extract of defendant's accounts, which plaintiff summoned for but defendant suppressed. Such a point is not one which can be decided on the terms of the document alone. The surrounding circumstances have also to be considered. Now the lower Court rejected the document in limine before any evidence as to these circumstances had been led and owing to his action, it is probable, as is urged before me, that all the evidence available regarding these circumstances was not put forward. Even as it is, there is evidence in Exs. A, B and D practically unanswered so far by defendants, which assert definitely that the "rokha" is only a copy of defendant's own accounts, in which the actual acknowledgment was entered.

In the view he took of the case the Subordinate Judge held that it had to be decided purely on the oral evidence. It is plain that he rejected the "rokha" without allowing oral evidence as to the surrounding circumstances to be led, on which evidence it was his duty to record a finding whether or not the dominant idea in obtaining the document was to obtain evidence of the debt. [See the case quoted by the Subordinate Judge in Surjumull Murlidhar Chandick v. Ananta Lal Damani (1).]

The case must, therefore, go back. I reverse the decree of the lower Court and direct that this case be re-heard in the light of the above remarks. Costs up to date will abide the result.

suit for, against co-sharer—Claim for rent, whether can be joined—Precedents—Revenue cases

A co-sharer, in a suit for an account brought under s. 165 of the Agra Tenancy Act against another co-sharer, cannot join a claim in respect of a separate matter altogether, namely, for rent

Kalyan Singh v. Raja, 3 Unreported Decisions, p. 343, followed.

The High Court ought to follow, especially in matters of procedure, as far as it can do, the policy or line of decisions adopted by the Revenue Side in cases which strictly belong to the revenue jurisdiction.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Budaun, dated the 31st of August 1925.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—I agree entirely with Mr. Haidar that this is a nice question and an important question, but having made up my mind quite clearly, and being prepared to give my reasons, I propose to dismiss the appeal so that he can appeal without further delay to the Letters Patent Bench. The question of law is whether a co-sharer having claim against another co-sharer, in respect of a separate matter altogether, namely for rent, can join that claim to a suit under s. 165 of the Tenancy Act brought for an account. It is a mere question of procedure, but sometimes questions of procedure go to the root of a matter, and I can understand that the Revenue Side may have reasons for refusing to allow two such suits to be joined. A suit for accounts involves totally different considerations, and inasmuch as Assistant Collectors are not trained lawyers, it is quite likely that it is considered important to keep these matters distinct. The revenue procedure is strict and technical, and I find on referring to the Fourth Schedule, that the suits on the Revenue Side are grouped and that a suit under s. 95 or s. 102 for arrears of rent is grouped in group A, whereas a suit under s. 165 is grouped under group B. I find also that in the case of Kalyan Singh v. Raja (1) which I am told refers to the Board of Revenue—the authority which the learned Judge has relied upon in his judgment—the Revenue Side have held that rent payable by a co-sharer for his tenancy cannot be taken into account under this section. I have not seen the report and I do not know what reasons are given, but I assume that the Revenue Court have good reasons. Mr. Agarwala in his well-known book on this subject upon which he is an authority cites this case without comment, presumably because there was no special reason for criticising it. I think the High Court ought to follow, especially in matters of procedure, as far as it can do so, the policy or line of decisions adopted by the Revenue Side in cases which strictly belong to the revenue jurisdiction, and I, therefore, hold that the learned District Judge was right in the view which he took. Holding the clear view that I do, and having given my reasons for agreeing with the lower Appellate Court, I dismiss the appeal summarily so as to enable the appellant, if so advised, to appeal under the Letters Patent without delay.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 2 (3)—Post settlement Inam, whether estate—Inamdar, whether land-holder—Second appeal—New case.

The consideration that a person is the owner of both the varams is material in determining the applicability of the Madras Estates Land Act, only where the land is a whole inam village and an enfranchised inam. [p. 1049, col 1]

Where a post settlement inam is a whole village held on a permanent under-tenure, the case falls under s. 2 (3) (e) of the Madras Estates Land Act. [p. 1050, col 1]

Where in a suit by a tenant claiming to be a ryot, under the Madras Estates Land Act to set aside an alleged sale of his holding against an inamdar, the plaintiff and the defendant both in the Trial Court and in the Court of Appeal proceed on the footing that the plaintiff was a ryot and the defendant a land-holder, it is not open to the defendant in second appeal to contend that he (the defendant) was a ryot and that the plaintiff was an under-tenant under him and that the Madras Estates Land Act was not applicable as between them. [p. 1049, col 2]

Second appeals against a decree of the District Court, North Arcot at Vellore in A. S. Nos. 122 to 134 and 121 of 1922, preferred against that of the Court of the Revenue Divisional Officer at Vellore, in Summary Suits Nos. 4 to 8, 14 to 21 and 3 of 1921 respectively.

The Advocate-General and Mr. M. S. Vaidyanatha Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. Subrahmanya Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first point argued by the learned Advocate General before me in this batch of second appeals is that the Estates Land Act does not apply to the case. To understand this point it is necessary to set forth the history of the suit village. Exhibit D is a statement dated the 15th day of January 1873 initialled by Mr. Whiteside the then Collector of North Arcot. It is headed "statement showing the particulars of shrotriem mokasa sarvamaniam villagers in the minor estate of Arni jaghir, North Arcot District." It shows that the suit village of Rajammarpuram was granted by the then jagirdar Thirumala Rao Saheb in Fasli 1211 to the ancestor of the defendant's vendor K. Krishna Rao. The grantee seems to have applied that certain lands may be given to him on cowle tenure for constructing a tank and building a village. The suit village was granted to him and for the first two years after the grant, no assessment was fixed. It was said that the assessment will be fixed after two years. In Fasli 1215 he submitted accounts and requested that 50 pagodas may be fixed on it as mutka (rent) and it was accordingly fixed. Afterwards a document was issued to his son Madhava Rao in Fasli 1233 which states that the beriz was reduced to 10 pagodas. So far the statements in column 19 of Ex. D suggest that the village was granted to a ryot for rent. The document then proceeds to say "The inam appears to have been granted subsequent to paimash. In 1223 the grantee represented that the ryots were very poor and the rent should be reduced. Accordingly 40 pagodas were permanently remitted. It will be safe to continue the grant which evidently falls within the scope of s. 15 of Regulation XXX of 1802". From the reference to s. 15 of Regulation XXX of 1802, the Advocate-General argues that the whole transaction was one of leasing to a ryot, that the so-called grantee Krishna Rao and his son Madhava Rao were merely ryots under the Arni jagirdar and the defendant who is the descendant of the original grantee is a ryot under the Arni jagirdar and the plaintiffs are under-tenants to whom the Estates Land Act does not apply. If the defendant is not a ryot under the jagirdar of Arni but is himself regarded as a land-holder, his position would then be that of one who is generally and loosely described as a subsequent inamdar. If he is a subsequent inamdar, the matter is not open to me for discussion though I confess I am inclined to agree with the view of Wallis, C. J. in Gadadhara Das v. Suryanarayan Potnaik (1) and of Schawbe, C. J., and Devadoss, J., in Brakmayya v. Achiraju (2). So far as this High Court is concerned, the matter is now settled by the majority of the Full Bench against an inamdar and I am bound by it. Where a grantee pays some kind of rent to the zemindar whether he should be regarded as a subsequent inamdar and, therefore, a land holder to whom the Estates Land Act should apply as between him and his tenant or whether he should be regarded as a ryot under the zemindar paying rent to him, the Estates Land Act applying to his relations with the zemindar but not as between him and his under-tenants (s. 19 of the Act) must always be a difficult question to decide in the application of the Full Bench decision. In this state of the authorities, if there is nothing else in the case, the matter would no doubt be a somewhat difficult point to decide but the pleadings in the case make my task lighter and the position of the appellant more difficult. The suit was brought under s. 112 of the Estates Land Act. The defendant was described as a shrotriemdar. Even mokasa Ex. D purports to be a list of shrotriem sarvamaniam villagers and a mere cultivating ryot cannot get into such a document. Paragraph 4 of the plaint says:—"The plaintiffs and others have been paying to the defendant's predecessors' kist at the said rate from time out of memory and the lands comprised in pattah No. 34 as ryoti lands". This is not denied in the written statement; on the other hand para. 5 of the written statement refers to the plaintiff and other ryots of the village. So also para. 7. In para. 10 of his written statement defendant pleads that he is entitled to levy the premium under the Estates Land Act. Paragraph 11 refers to plaintiffs and other ryots of the village. Paragraph 12 says that the suit is barred by limitation under Schedule A serial No. 5 under s. 55 of the Madras Estates Land Act. No plea is taken in the written statement; no issue raised as to the maintainability of the suits. In the course of the arguments before the Deputy Collector, the defendant seems to have argued that he possessed occupancy right over the lands of the shrotriem. The Deputy Collector meets his argument by referring to the judgment in Summary Suits Nos. 53 to 97 of 1915 on the file of the Divisional Officer, Vellore, (Ex. I) which held that the ryots of the village held occupancy rights and which also shows that the District Munsif before whom the suits were originally filed returned them for presentation before the Revenue Divisional Officer on the ground that the shrotriem was an estate under the Estates Land Act. Those suits were by a mortgagee of the defendant, the defendant himself not being a party to them. It may be that the Deputy Collector was not quite correct in regarding Ex. I as conclusive between the parties. The Deputy Collector then says "When this position is arrived at, there is no more argument necessary to show that the defendant was not acting under s. 53 of the Estates Land Act and that he was not allowed by the provisions of s. 46 of the Act to collect premium from the plaintiffs." Up to this stage no question about the applicability of the Act seems to have been raised by the defendant and even then the point raised by him was that he was the owner of both the varams and that the plaintiff had no occupancy right. There seems to have been a confusion of thought on the part of the defendant and of his legal advisers. The consideration that a person is the owner of both the varams is material in determining the applicability of the Estates Land Act, only where the land is a whole village and an enfranchised inam: vide s. 2, cl (3) (d) of the Act. We have nothing to do with an enfranchised inam in this case. The suit land is part of the Arni estate. The only question is whether the defendant is himself a land-holder or whether he is a ryot under the jaghirdar and it is immaterial whether he was the owner of both melvaram and kudivaram prior to the suit.

If he is a subsequent inamdar, even if he was at one time owner of both melvaram and kudivaram, that fact does not make the act inapplicable as in the case of an enfranchised inam. But the defendant seems to have thought up to the arrangement in 1919 under Ex. C he was the owner of both varams and, therefore, he had a right to take premium or charge enhanced rents though he is a subsequent inamdar and that somehow some provisions of the Estates Land Act will not touch him. Still he seems to have thought that he was a land-holder under the Estates Land Act. In appeal also no question as to the applicability of the Estates Land Act seems to have been raised. In second appeal the point was, no doubt, expressly raised in grounds Nos 2 to 8. The Advocate General suggests that the defendant never meant to admit that the act was applicable to him up to the execution of Ex. C in 1919 and that the arrangement under Ex. C itself was effected in consideration of the defendant admitting plaintiff's occupancy rights and it may be that the defendant thought that after the conferring of the occupancy rights on the tenants under Ex. C, the village became an estate, but the District Judge points out in para 3 of his judgment that the suggestion put forward by the defendant, namely, that Ex. C was executed in consideration of defendant admitting occupancy rights of the tenant differed materially from the plea in the written statement. Anyhow the written statement does not deny the allegation in para 4 of the plaint that the plaintiffs and others were enjoying the lands as ryoti lands and were paying kist to the defendant's predecessors from time out of memory. It is impossible to make out from defendant's written statement that they ever meant to deny that the suit land was an estate prior to 1919 and to allege that it became an estate only after 1919. Thus with reference to the pleadings, I must hold it is not open to the defendant now to contend that the Estates Land Act is not applicable as between him and the plaintiffs. I think there is also another ground on which this point must be decided against the appellant though this was not suggested by the respondent's Vakil at the time of argument and there was no discussion on it at the Bar. The view taken by Wallis, C. J., in Gadadhara Das v. Suryanarayana Patnaik (1) and by Schawabe, C. J., and Devadoss, J., in

Brahmayya v. Achiraju (2) can only apply to minor subsequent inams, that is, the so-called subsequent inams which are not whole villages. Where the subsequent inam is a whole village held on a permanent under-tenure, the case must really fall under s. 2 (3) (e) and there is no scope for a difference of opinion. In the present case though the suit village was carved out of another larger village, ever since 1801 it was regarded as a distinct and separate village. That being so, cl. (e) of s. 2 (3) will apply. The first contention of the appellant must, therefore, be disallowed and the conclusion of the Courts below that the higher rent sought to be charged on the plaintiffs and other tenants under Ex. C is not binding on the ryots must stand.

The second point argued by the Advocate-General may now be stated. In 1919 the defendant and his ryots entered into an arrangement described in Ex. C by which from Fasli 1329 onwards, a rate of rent higher than the rate prevailing up to then was to be paid for the lands in the village and a lump sum of one year's rent according to the old rate was to be paid to the defendant. The sum was accordingly paid. In para. 6 of the plaint it was suggested that the payment was towards the rent for Fasli 1329. This was denied by the defendant who alleged it was in pursuance of Ex. C. The plaintiff took no issue on the point. The whole oral evidence set forth by the Divisional Officer shows it was in pursuance of Ex. C and his contention was that it was paid as a premium. Nor was any suggestion made before the District Judge that the payment was for rent for Fasli 1329. This payment was, therefore, obviously a premium and was so regarded by the Divisional Officer, though its purpose seems to have been to enable the defendant to make certain improvements to the village tank. Whatever the purpose might have been, the defendant was not entitled to collect it under s. 46 of the Act. The plaintiff and the other ryots were entitled to recover it from him if they filed a suit within six months from the date of the collection. (Schedule, A part II, item No. 15). In this suit, there is no prayer for the recovery of that amount. Even if there is a prayer, it would have been barred.

But the plaintiff alleged in para. 7 of the plaint that the defendant is liable to have the amount credited from the rent for Fasli 1329, but there is no prayer asking for such a credit in para. 11 of the plaint. In the view I take, the absence of a prayer is immaterial. If the suit had been filed within six months after payment, the plaintiffs might be granted a declaration that the amount paid by the ryots might be credited towards the rent for Fasli 1329. But the suits were not filed within six months after payment. To compel the defendant to credit it towards the rent of Fasli 1329 is the same as taking back the amount from him on the ground of an illegal collection and then re-paying it to him under the heading of rent. This process is not permissible as it cannot be recovered from him on account of the bar of six months. The Deputy Collector did not discuss the point. It is a point which arose only on the fourth issue after his findings on the first and second issues are known. Accepting his finding on the first and second issues that the pattahs for enhanced rents are not valid, the question arises whether the pattahs should not be held to be valid for the rents properly payable according to plaintiff's contentions, and, if so, whether the sale notices should be held valid to that extent. [Vide s. 53, cl. (2)]. The point was raised before the District Judge by the defendant and the District Judge disallowed it on grounds which are not intelligible to me. The Judge says "The payments cannot be regarded as illegal exactions in addition to the rents lawfully payable. They were made by plaintiffs in ignorance of their legal rights." I am not able to understand how, because the plaintiffs made the payments in ignorance of their legal rights and the defendant obtained the payment taking advantage of the ignorance, the payment is other than an illegal payment falling under s. 144 of the Act. It was not paid as rent. It was paid as something else. Defendant was not entitled to it; it was, therefore, an illegal exaction. The plaintiffs ought to have sued for it within six months. Their right to recover it is barred. They are, therefore, bound to pay the rents for Fasli 1329 and the sale notices to set aside which the suits are filed under s. 112 of the Act are partly valid and partly invalid. See s. 52 (3) of the Estates Land Act.

I, therefore, modify the decrees of the Courts below by declaring that the sale notices issued by the defendant are invalid in so far as the excess rent charged under Ex. X is concerned, but are valid in so far as they cover the rent previously payable by the ryots.

The parties will bear their own costs throughout.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL SIDE APPEAL No. 15 OF 1925.

Present:—Sir Victor Murray Coutts Trotter, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Beasley.

L. RATHAN SINGH—PETITIONER—

APPELLANT

versus

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 10 (2), (vi), (vii), (ix)—Obsolete machinery—Motor-car rendered useless by accident—Reliefs under sub-sections, whether alternative or cumulative—Motor-car, purchase of, solely for use of parts in existing cars—Expenditure whether of capital nature or incurred for purposes of business—Deductions, right of assessee to.

'Obsolete machinery' under the Income Tax Act means machinery which though it is able to perform its function has become in common parlance out of date and performs its function so indifferently or at such a cost that a prudent man instead of continuing to use such machinery would discard it and instal more labour-saving machines. A new car which is wholly useless for its purposes because it has broken to pieces in an accident is not "obsolete machine" under the Act and the owner is not entitled to claim a deduction, therefore, under s. 10, (2) (vii) of the Act. [p. 1051, col. 2.]

The various reliefs by way of deductions specified in s. 10 of the Income Tax Act are not alternative and exclusive, but must be treated as disjunctive and cumulative and if any deduction claimed falls within the express words of any one of the sub-sections, it is not open to Government to say that it is really covered by the general provision of sub-s (vi), i.e., the omnibus cl. (vi) cannot be construed as extinguishing the right to deductions which are specifically outlined and defined in other sub-sections of the Act. [p. 1052, col. 2; p. 1053, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri, dated the 13th August 1924, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction of this Court in the matter of s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, s. 66 of the Income Tax Act and of Rathan Motor Service.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This Reference raises two points. The assessee's business is that of an owner of motor-cars plying for hire. Only two points were raised before the learned Judge, though the first was raised under two heads. We propose first to dispose of the second contention.

The assessee was the owner of a new car which very shortly after it was purchased met with an accident and had to be sold as scrap iron and the learned Judge has held that this entitles him to claim a deduction under s. 10 (2) (vii) of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1922 on the footing that this may be treated as having become in the words of the Act 'obsolete.' It seems to us that this is contrary to the plain meaning of the language used. 'Obsolete machinery' means machinery which though it is able to perform its function has become in common parlance out of date and performs its function so indifferently or at such a cost that a prudent man instead of continuing to use such machinery would discard it and instal more labour-saving machines. In our opinion, the word 'obsolete' is quite inapplicable to a new car which is wholly useless for its purposes because it has broken to pieces in an accident and, in our opinion, this cannot be allowed as a deduction and we disagree with the learned Judge.

A much more difficult point is raised with regard to the second matter which relates to certain items which were disallowed by the Income Tax Authorities as being of the nature of capital expenditure which is excluded from deduction by s. 10 (2) (ix). That sub-section allows any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of earning the profits or gains of the business. The latter comes to a total of Rs. 3,296-2-2 and it seems reasonably clear that the first three items were additions to the machinery and plant used by the firm, which can clearly be classed under the head of capital expenditure. The largest item is one of Rs. 1,925 which is described as the costs of the old car purchased from Tirali Srinivasa Iyengar. The evidence of the assessee about that which seems to have been accepted, is that he bought the car not to use it as car but to resolve it into its component elements and use the parts for casual repairs to his existing fleet of cars. The remaining items are for the renewal of various parts of the cars actually engaged in the business of the assessee.

The Income Tax Authorities rely upon a decision in Scotland under the Statute in vogue at the time, viz., s. XII of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act of 1878, 41 Vic. Ch. XV. That section directs the Commissioners in assessing the profits and gains of a trade to allow such deductions as they may think just and reasonable to represent the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year of any machinery or appliances used for the purpose of the concern and belonging to the person or company by whom the concern is carried on. Upon that it was held in the case of Caledonia Railway Co. v. Banks (1) decided in the Court of Exchequer in Scotland that the assessee could not deduct the actual expenses of occasional repairs and renewals and then proceed to claim an additional deduction under the general section of the Statute for the same thing under the guise of wear and tear. With that decision no body wishes to quarrel, but it is argued for the assessee that the position under the Indian Statute is quite different because the sections relating to deductions and the sub-sections allowing deductions must be taken to be disjunctive, and it is not an answer to a claim which clearly falls within the words of any one of the sub-sections to say to the assessee that he must be deemed to have obtained that deduction under some other sub-section. Deductions are allowed, such are material for the decision of this case—under s. 10 (2) (v), (vi) and (ix). Cl. (v) allows a deduction in respect of current repairs to buildings, machinery, plant or furniture, the deduction permitted being the amount paid on account thereof. It is said in this case that the renewal of parts of a machine cannot be treated as a current repair but must be treated as a new addition of capital to enable the machine to be kept in proper running order. It is pointed out that by cl. (vi) of sub-s. (2) a deduction is allowed in respect of depreciation which has been assessed by Government at the not ungenerous figure of 20 per cent. and it is said that the assessee having had the benefit of this large deduction under cl. (vi) cannot get the same deduction over again in another form by having recourse to cl. (v). In our opinion, if the Legislature meant the various reliefs by way of deductions specified in s. 10 of the Act to be alternative and exclusive, they could very easily have said so and, in our opinion, if any deduction claimed false within the express words of any one of the sub-sections it is not open to Government to say that it is really covered by the general provision of sub-s. (vi). It is obviously arguable that most of the repairs in this case can be described as current repairs though of, course, the matter is one of degree. If a carburetter of a motor car ceases to function, we should incline to the view that the renewal of the carburetter in order to enable the car to keep the road is properly described as running repair. On the other hand, if a car as a result of an accident had nothing left but a wheel and everything else had to be renewed, clearly the sensible view would be that the renewal of the car could only be described as an increase of capital. But apart from that we have the provision of sub-s. (2) (ix) which speaks in general terms of any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits or gains. Without committing ourselves to a view as to what are current repairs within the meaning of cl. (v), we think it reasonably clear that the cost of repair set forth in the list that was handed up to us must be treated as an expenditure incurred for the purpose of earning the profits or gains of the business and we do not think that it can properly be treated as capital expenditure which is excluded from the operation of cl. (ix). If this view be correct, the cost of an old car for the sole purpose of using bits and parts of it for carrying out repairs to cars on the road which is the main item in the assessee's claim for deductions being nearly two-thirds of the whole, stands on the same footing as if he had obtained and used new parts for repairing his fleet of motor-cars from time to time. In this case we feel that the Legislature has done that which is so often done in Indian Acts and that by enumerating too much and trying to cover every possible case, they have per incuriam given more than one remedy in respect of what is clearly one ground of deduction. But until and unless the Act is amended, we think that separate heads of reliefs must be treated as disjunctive and cumulative and hold that the deductions claimed except as regards the first three items fall within the express words of s. 10 (2) (ix) and that the Scottish case is inapplicable in India, because the Act which the Scottish case interpreted was an Act which only contained deductions for depreciation and did not like the Indian Act specify under separate heads other deductions differently described. We do not think it would be right to hold that what I may call the omnibus cl. (vi) can be construed as extinguishing the right to deductions which are specifically outlined and defined in other sub-sections of the Act. We feel the result to be unsatisfactory and to be one which gives more to the assessee than was intended or indeed is just; but the fault is that of the draftsman of the Indian Act who threw into the section the omnibus clause modelled on s. XII of 41 Vic. Ch. XV without reflecting that such a clause was not wanted in an Act which contained the specific deductions taken from the later English Finance Acts. The result will be that the appeal is allowed with costs. On the reference there will be judgment for the Commissioner with costs to be fixed at Rs 150.

Where the defendant's predecessor-in-title was allowed by the Corporation of Madras to put up a building on the roadside in the City of Madras for the purpose of selling aerated water and ice and leases for terms had been granted and renewed from time to time to defendant's predecessor and then to defendant, and two years before suit, yearly permits had been issued under the Municipal Act to the defendant to keep the ice depot

When a man has spent a considerable sum of money in erecting a pucca masonry building on another's land, there is a legitimate inference to be drawn that he did so in the hope that he would not be evicted, although it is an inference which may be rebutted by other circumstances, which show that he could not have had such a hope. Appeal from a decree of the City Civil Court, Madras, in O. S. No. 68 of 1923.

Mr. K. Duraisami Iyengar, for the Appellant

Mr. S. Rangasami Iyengar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the facts are as follows. The defendant's uncle, Muthuswami Naicker, put up the building in suit 48 years ago, on the roadside land in the Pantheon Road, for the purpose of selling aerated waters and ice. The building is a pucca masonry one and the plaintiff, Corporation of Madras, now wishes to eject the defendant, to whom the property was given by his uncle about 1908. The defendant obtained lease deeds for this property in 1908, 1911 and 1914 for a period of three years each. At the end of the last lease, the Corporation proposed to sell the right to occupy the building and site at auction and notice was issued on 18th April 1917; (Ex. IV). The defendant protested against this by a Lawyer's notice (Ex. II) and put in a petition (Ex. III) on 30th April 1917. As a result of this, a fresh lease for one year was granted to the defendant and this was renewed for a second year in 1918 for the year 1918 1919. When the new Municipal Act was passed, the Corporation seems to have thought that it could not grant a lease of the suit property and they proposed to auction the property and grant a license. On 21st February 1919, the date of the auction, no bidders turned up. On 24th February 1919 the defendant went to the Revenue Officer and agreed to pay a rent of Rs 3-8 0 per mensem in respect of the suit land, and on 14th July 1919 the Corporation granted him the lease Ex. E-1. On 17th March 1920, a notice was issued by the Corporation, that the right of putting up a bunk on the suit site would be sold by auction. But, as a matter of fact, no auction appears to have taken place, and on 9th October 1920 the Corporation issued Ex. F, which purports to be a permit under s. 226 (1), Act IV of 1919. Under this the defendant was permitted to occupy the suit site for the purpose of keeping an ice depot for one year. A similar permit was issued on 4th August 1921 for the year ending 31st March 1922. On 2nd March 1922, the Corporation again proposed to auction the site and then finally on 11th November 1922 the Corporation gave a notice to the defendant to quit. The defendant replied stating that he had held the land for a very long period and that he was entitled to compensation under the City Tenants' Protection Act.

The main question for consideration here is, whether the defendant is a tenant within the meaning of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act. The learned City Civil Judge has found that he was not a tenant but merely a licensee. We see that upto 31st March 1920, the defendant had been obtaining leases from the Corporation for the use of the site and was undoubtedly up to that time a tenant. It is suggested that for the year 1920 the Corporation had no power to grant a lease of the suit land as it comes within the definition of public street contained in the Act. Such public streets are vested in the Corporation and although the Corporation has not the full ownership in them, yet they have a certain proprietary right in the soil, and this has been recognised in Sundaram Aiyar v. Municipal Council of Madura and the Secretary of State for India in Council (1) in which it was held that the Corporation had a certain proprietary right in the soil of public streets. Under the new Municipal Act of 1919, the Corporation is authorised to lease any Corporation immoveable property and if the Corporation has a proprietary right in public streets to the extent of that right it can grant a lease, and even, if it had no right to grant a lease I do not think the Corporation can now contend that the lease actually granted by them in 1919 was void as being prohibited by law. Uptil March 1920 therefore, the defendant was a tenant. But it is contended for the respondents that by the mere fact of his accepting Exs. F and G the permits under s. 226 (1) he became a mere licensee. When we turn to s. 226 (1) we find that it deals with persons making holes and causing obstruction in the street, and provides that persons are forbidden to make holes or cause any obstruction in any street unless the consent of the Commissioner is obtained. Clause (2) prescribes that, when such permission is granted, such persons shall cause such holes or obstruction to be sufficiently barred and enclosed and shall cause such hole or obstruction to be sufficiently lighted during the light. It is not suggested that the plaintiff's building was in any sense an obstruction to the street and the idea of allowing him to occupy it for the purpose of keeping an ice depot from year to year has no connection with the provisions of s. 226. Section 226 deals with the temporary obstructions, which would be an offence unless permission is granted for making them. It has nothing whatever to do with giving licenses for keeping an ice depot. The defendant never even expressed his consent to be a licensee. He and his predecessor had been tenants of the Corporation for over 40 years and the mere fact that these extraordinary permits were issued to him and were not refused, cannot convert that tenancy into a holding by mere license. In the absence of evidence that the defendant agreed to be a mere licensee, I think that the mere issue of licenses would not be sufficient material to raise a presumption of a change in the nature of his possession, which had for many years been that of a tenant. The present case, where the license is obviously a license which the Corporation has no power to issue in such form and in the circumstances that existed, is much stronger and the defendant must be deemed to have been holding on as a tenant after expiry of his last lease. Even on 10th April 1920 he was treated by the Tahsildar as a tenant of the Corporation. No attempt was made to disturb his possession and his possession has all along been of the same nature. Whenever any change was proposed to be made, the defendant has protested and no change has actually been made in the nature of his possession. The question then arises whether the defendant is a tenant within the meaning of s. 2, cl. (4) of Act III of 1922. That clause reads as follows:—

"Tenant' means tenant of land liable to pay rent on it, every other person deriving title from him, and includes persons who continue in possession after the termination of the tenancy". The defendant certainly would seem to come within the definition. It is, however, argued that in order to understand this definition, which is not in itself ambiguous, one must refer to the preamble of the Act which says: "Whereas it is necessary to give protection to tenants who...have constructed buildings on others' lands in the hope that they would not be evicted so long as they pay a fair rent". The rule of construction is that the preamble of the Act may be referred to in a case of ambiguity or where it is necessary to interpret the Act itself so as to give effect to its purpose, but it is doubtful whether the meaning of definite and unambiguous words can be strained because their natural interpretation would seem to extend the alleged scope of the Act. In any case I do not think, that in the present instance it can be said that the Act does not refer to persons in the position of the defendant. Nor am I satisfied that the defendant's position is not that contemplated by the preamble. It is difficult now to adduce evidence that the person who constructed the suit building 48 years ago did so in the hope that he would not be evicted. The oral evidence of the actual builder to that effect would not be of much value when given for the purposes of such a suit as this, but I think, that, when a man has spent a considerable sum of money in erecting a pucca masonry building on another's land there is a legitimate inference to be drawn, that he did so in the hope that he would not be evicted, an inference, which may be rebutted by other circumstances, which show that he could not have had such a hope. In the present case there is something rather more than a mere inference, for, as the learned Judge points out, "the defendant's predecessor-in-title apparently ventured upon a brick-built structure, in view of the favour that he then enjoyed from very high officials who got ice from him". If he enjoyed the favour of high officials (possibly officials in the employ of the plaintiff Corporation) it is difficult to suppose, that he spent his money without hoping that he would be allowed to reap the benefit of the expenditure. In that view the defendant would come within the meaning of the Act. It is argued that if the provisions of the Act are applied literally, the scope of the Act would be very materially widened beyond that expressed in the preamble. This may be so, but when the Legislature passes an enactment, its provisions must be looked to rather than the intention of the Legislature, as revealed in the discussion which preceded the passing of the Act. Construing the Act as it stands, I must hold that the defendant is a tenant within the meaning of the Act and consequently under s. 3, is entitled on ejection to be paid compensation for his building. He did make an application under s. 9 but that is not pres-

ed. This is intelligible when we remember that the plaintiff Corporation is not the absolute owner of the plaint site and consequently what the defendant could purchase under s. 9 is only the limited interest of his landlord. The suit will have to be remitted to the lower Court for investigation as to the value of defendant's superstructure and when, that has been determined, the decree will have to be modified by awarding that amount to the defendant as compensation. A finding as to the amount of compensation payable to be submitted within three weeks. Objections seven days. The defendant will have his costs of this appeal and the costs of the lower Court will be provided for in the revised decree.

In compliance of the above order the City Civil Judge, Madras, submitted the following

* * * *

I submit a report to the effect that the structure put by the defendant on public Municipal land is worth Rs. 468-15-0 and that he is entitled to compensation at that rate before is evicted by the plaintiff.

* * * *

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner is not entitled to rental value but only to the value of the building. The finding that it is worth Rs. 465-15-0 is, therefore, accepted and plaintiff will have a decree for possession of the land and superstructure on payment of this amount less the annual rental due by defendant upto date of delivering possession. Each side will bear his own costs in the lower Court. The time for delivery is one month.

Co-purchasers—Excess price paid by one—Possession, suit for, by other—Decree conditional on payment of balance due—Court, jurisdiction of.

If one of two co-purchasers of a property has paid more than his portion of the purchase-money, the Court, in a suit for possession of his share by the other purchaser, can order that he must pay his portion of the purchase-money in default before recovering possession.

Rajah of Vizianagram v. Rajah Setrucherla Somasekhararaz, 26 M. 686; 13 M. L. J. 83, followed.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in A. S. No. 60 of 1921, (A. S. No. 987 of 1920, on the file of the District Court, Ramnad), presented against that of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Manamadura, in O. S. No. 367 of 1919.

Mr. A. V. Narayanaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the first defendant and second defendant jointly purchased the suit property, the first defendant paying Rs. 340, and the second defendant Rs. 60, the understanding being that each was to have half the property and the excess money paid by the first defendant was on behalf of the second defendant and re-payable by him. The first defendant subsequently redeemed a usufructuary mortgage on the land and paid the whole of the mortgage-money and took possession. Just prior to this redemption, the plaintiff bought the second defendant's share in the property and now brings this suit for redemption of his share of the usufructuary mortgage and for partition, and for delivery of possession of his separate share.

The second appeal has been argued at very great length on the assumption that this is a pure redemption suit, but this overlooks the fact that it is in effect and in name a partition suit, for the plaintiff seeks to recover a demarcated half share of the suit property. The lower Courts have ordered the plaintiff before getting possession of his half share to pay to the first defendant Rs. 140 the purchase-money paid by her on behalf of the second defendant. There can be no doubt that in a partition suit all equities between the members of the co-parcenary should be worked out allotting to each member the share to which he is equitably entitled. It is argued for the appellant that this principle is only applicable to the Hindu Law of partitions and that under any other law these equities cannot be enforced but no reasons are assigned for drawing such a distinction. We certainly have the authority of an American Writer (Freeman on Co-tenancy and Partition) that such equities should be adjusted. This seems to be only reasonable and in accordance with what is right and proper. Freeman at page 675 mentions the very same equity as is in dispute here. The passage runs:—

"If one of the co-tenants ... has advanced more than his proportion of the purchase-money, the Court may decree that payment of the excess be made to him, and in default of such payment, that the moiety of the tenant in default may be sold to satisfy the amount equitably due from it."

No English cases on the point have been cited, but I may refer to the case in Rajah of Vizianagram v. Rajah Setrucherla Somasekhararaz (1). There it was held that where a tenant paid the public revenue on the land, he was entitled to a charge for that amount against his co-owner. At page 703*, there is the following passage:—

"But when once the right of contribution is established, as in the present case, it certainly cannot be an inequitable or violent stretch of such right to make it a charge against the co-owner's share". Even if there is no legal charge in the present case, yet on equitable principles such a charge can be enforced and when it comes to partitioning the property between two co-tenants this equity should, in my opinion, be enforced. On this ground alone, I think the second appeal must fail and, therefore, I do not propose to discuss the various arguments put forward on the footing that this is a mere suit for redemption.

Another point has been raised, namely, that the first defendant is not entitled to interest on the Rs. 140. The lower Courts have awarded interest from the date of payment until the date of the decree. This, I think, is wrong. The plaintiff has not been allowed mesne profits, because the first defendant had paid the whole of the money due on the usufructuary mortgage, but from the date the first defendant got into possession, the purchase-money of Rs. 140 cannot bear interest; for she has, in lieu of interest, had possession of the land. Until that date the first defendant has certainly suffered damages in having had to pay the excess amount of the purchase-money and on that ground, I think, she is entitled to interest. The interest from 22nd July 1918 to 16th June 1920 is, therefore, disallowed. Subject to this modification, the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

— Co-sharers—Ouster

In the case of co-owners the possession of one co-owner is in law the possession of the other co-owners as well, and it is not possible for one co-owner to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster can bring about that result.

The fact that a co-sharer has been in exclusive possession of the joint house and has been making repairs to it, is not enough to constitute ouster.

A co-sharer has a right to repair the whole of the house, and, if he does so, his act cannot be considered to be an act of such an hostile character that it may be considered as equivalent to a denial on his part of the title of the other co-owner or co-owners. O

— Mortgage, redemption of—Widow of mortgagee retaining possession—Lawful origin—Nature of widow's possession.

Where after the redemption of a mortgage the mortgagee retains possession of the mortgaged property and, after his death, his widow comes to occupy the said property to the exclusion of the rightful heirs of her husband as well as the mortgagor, the possession of the widow cannot be referred to a lawful origin and is adverse to the mortgagor and, in case it extends beyond twelve years, will ripen into ownership.
A RAM KUR v. GOVIND RAM, A. I. R. 1926 All. 62; 48

— Mortgagor and mortgagee—Acquiescence.

As between the mortgagor and the mortgagee neither exclusive possession by the mortgagee for any length of time short of the statutory period of sixty years, nor any acquiescence by the mortgagor not amounting to a release of the equity of redemption, will be a bar or defence to a suit for redemption if the parties are otherwise entitled to redeem. O BAJRANG

 session. O SHEO NANDAN v. HIRA LAL, 13 O. L. J. 6; — Possession under invalid title—Co-sharers—

 Realization of rent by one co-sharer.

Adverse possession—concl.

If possession is acquired by a person under an invalid title and he continues to remain in possession for more than 12 years, although the document relating to his title may be invalid for want of registration or any other ground, yet the possession having lasted for more than 12 years the title becomes an unassailable one.

Therefore, where a party originally enters into possession under an unregistered sale-deed, the defect in his title is cured by his having been in possession for over 12 years.

If a co-sharer has been in possession of a particular land, his possession cannot be considered adverse against the other co-sharers, and his possession must be deemed to be on behalf of them all. In order to establish adverse possession in such a case a co-sharer has to establish that he expressly denied the title of the other co-sharers and remained in possession after such denial for over 12 years.

Therefore, the mere fact that a co-sharer has been realizing rents of certain plots of land in which he is a co-sharer, would not establish that he has been in adverse possession so as to extinguish the title of the other co-sharers. O MAHAPAL SINGH v. SARJOO PRASAD,

Agra pre-emption Act (XI of 1922), s. 12 (3)—

Person 'claiming pre-emption,' meaning of—Vendee, or intended vendee, whether included

The vendee, or proposed vendee, or contemplated vendee, or intended vendee, is a person "claiming pre-emption" within the meaning of the clause "more persons than one of the same class claiming pre-emption" in s. 12 (3) of the Agra Pre-emption Act.

The ordinary meaning of "to pre-empt" is to purchase in preference to others, that is to say, even of the whole world, and pre-emption is the effect of the purchase. The vendee, if he is successful in the end over other competitors, does in fact pre-empt and is, therefore, properly spoken of as a person claiming pre-emption. A JAGRUP SINGH v. INDRASAN PANDE, 24

In a suit by an occupancy tenant to eject a sub-tenant, where the latter alleges that he is himself the tenant-in-chief and is holding directly under the proprietor, no question of proprietary title is involved within s. 198 of the Agra Tenancy Act, and an appeal against the decision of the Assistant Collector lies to the Revenue Court and not to the Civil Court

The words "land-holder" and "tenant" do not in s. 198 (1) of the Agra Tenancy Act embrace "tenant" and his "sub-tenant"

Per Boys, J—There is nothing in the heading preceding s 198 of the Agra Tenancy Act or in s 198 (1) to indicate that in a case coming within s 198 (1) a question of proprietary title is necessarily in issue. Rather are all the indications to the contrary. The answer to the question whether a matter of proprietary title is in issue cannot be based on any conclusion that the case is or is not within s 198 but must be answered independently of s 198 A BALDEO KURMI v. A finding of fact cannot be disturbed in second appeal, provided the facts found by the lower Appellate Court are relevant and the finding is based on evidence proper for consideration

It is not necessary that the whole of the evidence given in the case should have been considered in the lower Appellate Court and still less that every part of it should have been mentioned in the judgment; interference is not justified by an apparent omission to consider some material part or even the main part of it. The publication of the notice mentioned in s. 52 of the Bengal Cess (Amendment) Act must be strictly proved before the liability of the holder of a tenure in respect of a cess can arise.

A certificate given by the Collector in accordance with the provisions of s. 52A of the Bengal Cess (Amendment) Act that a notice under s. 52 of the Act has been duly published, is conclusive proof of the fact that the publication was made. It is immaterial that the certificate refers to a publication which took place before the passing of the Bengal Cess (Amendment) Act IV of 1910 which added s. 52A to the Bengal Cess (Amendment) Act. The Amending Act only provides the method of proving the publication of the notice. It creates no new right nor does it affect any existing right. A notice published before the passing of the Amending Act, may, therefore, be proved by the production of a certificate from the Collector given after the passing of the Amending Act that the publication had been duly made. C RISHI KESH LAW v. Bengal Ferries Act (I B. C. of 1885), ss. 16, 28—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 234—Ferry, unauthorized, maintenance of—Carriage of passengers or property—Offence—Several offences, trial of—Procedure.

Bengal Ferries Act—concl'd.

Section 16 of the Bengal Ferries Act only makes the maintenance of a ferry within the prohibited area an unauthorized act but does not make such an act penal. Section 28 of the Act is, however, a penal provision which makes the maintenance of an unauthorized ferry under s. 16 of the Act an offence when the ferry is used for conveying a passenger, animal, vehicle or other thing for hire.

In order to constitute a ferry such as contemplated by the Bengal Ferries Act it is necessary that there should be two points on both sides of the river so that passengers and property may be conveyed from one side of the river to the other. It must be connected on both sides with land on the banks of the river.

The maintenance of a private ferry is in contravention of s. 16 of the Bengal Ferries Act for which the person who maintains the ferry may be liable for damages and an injunction may also be issued against him. If, however, in addition to maintaining such a prohibited private ferry, he carries passengers or property he is liable criminally under s. 28 of the Act and each time he conveys passengers or property for hire he commits an offence. Each trip is a separate transaction and can be tried separately. Where several trips are made within the course of a few days the proper procedure is for the Magistrate to try the accused at one time only in respect of three of these transactions and to use the remaining transactions as evidence in the case for the purpose of determining the amount of the damages payable under the Act. If a conviction is obtained in respect of transactions selected for trial, the Court should stay the enquiry into or trial of the other charges which will have the effect of the acquittal of the accused on those charges subject to the event of the conviction being set aside on appeal or revision. If the conviction is set aside the Magistrate may proceed with the trial of or enquiry into other charges. PAT JEORAN SINGH v RAMKISHUN LAL, 4 Pat. 503; A. I. R. 1925 Pat 623, 27 Cr L J 359 871

sumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that they have sprung up since the Settlement. If they existed at the time of Settlement they were left under the general regulations to the zemindar in the absence of any specific exclusion. The onus is not on the assessee to prove inclusion but upon the Crown to prove exclusion.

The Permanent Settlement Regulations apply as much to subsequently settled lands as to lands settled in 1793.

Proceedings under s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are proceedings not merely for ejectment, but to have a fair and equitable rent assessed by the Court. If the tenant refuses to accept the agreement filed under the provisions of the section, it is then that a suit for ejectment under the section can be commenced.

The word "agreement" in sub-s. (7) of s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act refers not to the agreement mentioned in the previous sub-sections but to the agreement arrived at between the landlord and the tenant when the Court has fixed the fair and equitable rent and the tenant has elected to pay that rent and not to be ejected from the holding.

The rent accruing due during the pendency of proceedings under s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not suspended by virtue of the proceedings, and a suit after the termination of such proceedings to recover such rent is governed by Art. 2 (b) of Sch. III to the Bengal Tenancy Act and the period of limitation provided in that Article is not extended by the operation of s. 14 of the Limitation Act. C PORT CANNING AND LAND IMPROVEMENT CO. v. (2) that if the defendant wished to challenge the proceedings under s. 105 on the ground of non-service of notice, he ought to have questioned the proceedings before the Settlement Officer, or by way of proceedings appropriate for such relief or by appeal, and that it was not open to him to do so in answer to the present suit. C TARAMONER CHOUDHURANI v. Bills of Lading Act (IX of 1856), s. 3—Bill of Lading, description of goods in, whether conclusive—Exemptions clause in Bill of Lading, effect of—Port Trust, whether entitled to benefit of exemption.

The general rule based on the provisions of s. 3 of the Bills of Lading Act, to the effect that in the absence of any proof that the Bills of Lading were granted under a misrepresentation without any default on the part of the person signing them and wholly due to the fault of the shipper or the holder of such Bills of Lading, the Bills of Lading are conclusive evidence that the goods bearing particular marks as shown in the respective Bills of Lading were put on board, has no application when the Shipping Company has protected itself by insertion of a clause in the Bill of Lading that the marks and numbers though shown in the Bill of Lading are unknown to them and that they do not admit that the marks or numbers shown in the Bill of Lading are correct and when they have exempted themselves from liability against obliteration or difference of marks.

Section 3 of the Bills of Lading Act applies only in the case of the master or person signing the Bill and does not apply to the Port Trust.

Even if the Port Trust be considered to be the agent of the Shipping Company, they would be equally entitled to the benefit of an exemption clause, as a wharfinger is justified or excused by the same thing as would justify or excuse the master and can, consequently, claim benefit of exemptions provided in a Bill of Lading. S. The interest of a widow in a watan is to be compared to the interest of a Hindu widow in her husband's estate.

A widow holding an interest in watan property for the term of her life or until her marriage is not a "holder" within the meaning of that term in s. 15 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, and the Collector negotiating with such a widow is not authorized to pass a commutation order under s. 15.

A commutation order passed under s. 15 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, without making a record of any investigation or giving any opportunity to the other members of the watan family of being heard and without recording reasons is invalid.

— Railway Company—Risk Note B—"Robbery from running train," whether includes theft—"Wilful neglect," meaning of—"Running train," meaning of: The expression "robbery from a running train" in Risk Note B used in the transmission of packages on the Railway does not include theft or taking without force. It has its technical meaning assigned to it by the Penal Code.

'Wilful neglect' as used in the Risk Note B may be taken to be the failure of a person to take any reasonable measures that he was aware or should have been aware were likely to lessen the risk of loss of a consignment or a portion of it

The term 'running train' in Risk Note B does not signify that the train must actually be in motion. If the train is on its journey from one destination to another, that is, from junction to junction it cannot be said that the train is not a running train simply because it stops either on the road-side station or at any place between the road-side stations. Cause of action—“Completed” and “continuous” causes of action—Prospective damages—Damages as mesne profits, when recoverable.

There is a distinction between a completed cause of action which may yet produce damage in future and a continuous cause of action from which continuous damage steadily flows.

The term “prospective damages” is applied to the damages which are awarded to a plaintiff not as a compensation for the ascertained loss which he has sustained at the time of commencing his action but in respect of loss which, it may reasonably be anticipated, he will suffer thereafter in consequence of the defendant's act or omission.

A plaintiff is entitled to have prospective damages assessed only when the cause of action is complete. In the case of a continuous cause of action a suit for damages will lie every time damages accrue from the act, but prospective damages are not recoverable, for the cause of action is not the act but the damage arising therefrom.

A suit, therefore, for mesne profits as damages against a trespasser in respect of agricultural land is premature if it is brought before the end of the agricultural year when the crops are gathered. N YADO v. AMBASHANKAR, A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 260 75

A cow-shed erected on posts and having no foundations is a “building” within the meaning of the word as used in the C. P. Municipal Act of 1903.

Section 68 of the C. P. Municipal Act of 1903 refers to land and houses which are the property of the Government and can have no application in the case of a nazul plot leased out for a term of years for building thereon by a private individual.

Under s. 66 of the C. P. Municipal Act of 1903 a person whose application to a Municipal Committee for permission to build has not been sanctioned within a month of its being made has to remind the Committee of this fact and if after a further period of 15 days no reply is received, the Committee is to be deemed to have sanctioned the proposed building. This will not, however, entitle such person to erect another structure of an entirely different nature from that adumbrated in his application for permission to build.

Section 66 of the C. P. Municipal Act of 1903 contemplates a sanction given by the Committee or Building Sub-Committee in its corporate capacity and it is not legal to dispense with a meeting of the body for obtaining a sanction by the expedient of obtaining the opinions of individual members by circulating the papers. The omission to call a meeting is not curable by s. 24 of the Act.

The lease of a nazul plot by a Municipal Committee for the purpose of building thereon cannot supersede the statutory provisions contained in s. 66 of the C. P. Municipal Act of 1903 relating to the grant of permission to build, and can in no way estop the Municipal Committee from refusing to allow any building to be erected on the plot or insisting on keeping it vacant, on grounds relevant under Ch. C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 47—“Held land continuously”, meaning of—Forcible dispossession of tenant by landlord—No acquiescence by tenant—Tenancy, whether determined.

The words “held land continuously” as used in s. 47 of the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1898 imply “held as a tenant,” but not necessarily “occupied or cultivated.” The requirement of s. 47 is not actual continuous possession as a matter of fact but continuously holding as a tenant.

If a tenant is ejected under a decree of a Court, there is a lawful ejectment and clear break in the tenancy, but the mere fact of a forcible or unlawful ejectment does not necessarily break the tenancy although the tenant may have been temporarily out of possession.

The mere ejectment of a tenant does not necessarily determine his tenancy which can only be ended in certain express ways, such as those enunciated in s. 111 of the Transfer of Property Act.

A forcible ejectment of a tenant by the landlord cannot determine the tenancy unless there has been a subsequent acquiescence in the ejectment on the part of the tenant. N VITHORA z. SADASHEO, A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 253 58

A decree passed in a redemption suit on the basis of a compromise provided that on payment of a certain sum to the defendant within one month of the date of the compromise the plaintiff would be entitled to get the property redeemed and to be put in possession and that after the expiry of the fixed period he would be entitled to execute the decree on payment of the sum mentioned in the decree. Plaintiff failed to pay the amount within the time mentioned in the decree and failed to apply for execution of the decree within three years of its date. He subsequently brought a second suit for redemption of the same property.

Held, that inasmuch as the first decree did not provide that the plaintiff's right to redeem was to be extinguished absolutely in case of default of payment he was not prevented from bringing a second suit for redemption and that the defendant was still a mortgagee and had not become absolute proprietor of the property. A MOHAMDI BEGAM v. The word 'agriculturist' in s 60 (c), C P C., is not used in its etymological sense, it is used to denote a person making his living by tilling the soil, in other words, one whose sole means of livelihood is gained by cultivating land and does not necessarily mean only a person who works with his hands. The protection from attachment under the clause is given only to small owners of land as well as actual tillers of the soil.

A large landed proprietor, even though his sole income is from land, is not an "agriculturist" within the meaning of s 60 (c), C P C., and is not entitled to protection thereunder.

The exemption from attachment under cl (c) of s 60, C P C., is given in respect of a house or building occupied by an agriculturist, i.e., a house dwelt in by the agriculturist as such and necessary for his effectively pursuing his occupation as an agriculturist.

A mansion in a large village in which the owner lives, even though he has no other source of income except that from land, is not such a house as is contemplated by cl (c) of s 60, C P C., nor is the house of an ordinary agriculturist situated at a considerable distance from the land which he cultivates and which is not necessary for effective or convenient cultivation of the land. M MUTHUVENKATARAM REDDIAR v. Persons who reside in the neighbourhood of a mosque without being habitual worshippers in it or in any manner specially interested in it, although as Muhammadans they may have a right to offer prayers therein, do not possess sufficient "interest in the trust" within the meaning of s. 92, C. ss. 94, 151, O. XXXIX, rr. 1, 2—Injunction restraining execution of decree, whether can be granted—Inherent power of Court

On an application in a pending suit by the plaintiff for an injunction restraining the execution of a decree obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff's father:

Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to grant the injunction either under O. XXXIX, or under s. 94 or s. 151, C. P. C.

When the C. P. C. makes provision for a certain procedure it must be deemed to be exhaustive in that respect and the provisions of s. 151 of the Code cannot be invoked in opposition to those provisions.

Under s. 94, C. P. C., the Court is given power to issue injunctions provided the rules make provision for the exercise of that power. The rules are contained in O. When an appeal is filed against a preliminary decree, but no stay of proceedings is asked for, and a final decree is passed by the Trial Court during the pendency of the appeal against the preliminary decree, the proper course for the appellant in such a case is to put an appeal on the file against the final decree, or at least to inform the Appellate Court, when the appeal against the preliminary decree comes on for hearing, that a final decree has been passed. B CHANDULAL MAGANLAL v MOTILAL HARILAL, 27 Bom. During the pendency of a suit the plaintiff made what purported to be an application under para 20 of Sch. II, C. P. C., stating that the matter in suit had been referred to arbitration and that an award had been made and requesting that the award may be filed and a decree passed in accordance with it. Defendant filed objections denying any valid reference to arbitration or the making of any valid award. The Court took evidence and decided that a valid reference and a valid award had been made and passed a decree in terms of the award. On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that no award had been made and remanded the case to the first Court for trial according to law. On second appeal by the plaintiff.

Held, (1) that the order of the Trial Court although in form a decree, must be treated as an order directing that the award be filed, and that as such it was open to appeal.

(2) that even if it was regarded as an order recording a compromise it was still an order open to appeal.

(3) that the appeal preferred by the defendant to the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be treated as an appeal from an order, with the result that no second appeal was competent. A MUMTAZ ALI v. ALLAH BANDA 600

s. 109—"Final order", meaning of—Interlocutory order—Appeal to Privy Council

The words "final order" in s. 109, C. P. C., are used in their ordinary sense. They mean an order which puts to an end a litigation between parties, or at all events disposes so substantially of the matters in issue between them as to leave only subordinate or ancillary matters for decision.

The order by which a Court sets aside a compromise of a suit is an interlocutory and not a final order.

Appeals on matters interlocutory in their nature should be allowed to be preferred to His Majesty in Council only when their decision will practically put an end to the litigation and finally decide the rights of the parties. A BHAGWATI DAYAL v. —Compromise entered into by father, whether binding on son.

When the High Court maintains the decree of a lower Court it affirms the decision of the lower Court within the meaning of s. 110 of the C. P. Leave to appeal to the Privy Council in such a case can be granted only if there is a substantial question of law involved in the case.

A substantial question of law within the meaning of s. 110 of the C. P. C. means a question of law in respect of which there may be a difference of opinion.

The general principle that a Hindu son is bound by a bona fide compromise entered into by his father for the benefit of the family is well-settled and is not a substantial question of law within the meaning of s. 110 of the C. P. C. L DHANPAT RAI v. KAHAN SINGH, 2 L. C. 107 479

Stay of execution of a decree was directed by the Court on the judgment-debtor furnishing security by a specified date. The judgment-debtor failed to furnish security on that date, and the Court directed the decree-holder to take steps for execution at once. The decree-holder deposited talbana for service of sale proclamation on the same day but did not file the processes, and the Court dismissed the execution case for default there and then. On revision:

Held, that the Court exercised its jurisdiction illegally in not allowing the decree-holder reasonable time for filing processes, as he could not have been expected to be ready with the processes on the expectation that the judgment-debtor would fail to furnish security, and that, therefore, the dismissal of the execution case for default must be set aside. C FIRM OF RAM PROSAD-RAM KISSEN v. The High Court has power to interfere with the proceedings of a lower Court even in the case of an interlocutory order where the effect of that interlocutory order is not merely to prescribe a particular procedure, to admit or to shut out a particular piece of evidence or to admit or exclude particular parties,

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Where the Court against whose orders there is an application for revision has so used its jurisdiction that the result of allowing its order to stand will be definitely to decide the case pending before it, so that all the proceedings thereafter taken would be merely infructuous and would result in a waste of time, then the High Court will look into the order and if justice requires it will set it aside. S MUNICIPALITY OF TANDO ADAM v. — s. 145, O. XXV, r. 1 (3)—Security for costs—Bond hypothecating property—Enforcement of security—Procedure—Execution

Plaintiff was required to give security for costs and appellant who offered himself as surety executed a bond that if the plaintiff failed to obey the order of the Court with regard to the payment of costs, certain property of the surety specified in the bond would be liable for the satisfaction of the order and that if the property proved insufficient for the purpose the surety would himself be liable. Plaintiff's suit was dismissed and plaintiff was ordered to pay the costs of the suit. Defendant took out execution for costs and applied for sale of the property hypothecated by the surety.

Held, (1) that on the language of the bond executed by the surety the defendant was not bound to proceed first in execution against the plaintiff and only on his failure to obtain satisfaction from the plaintiff to proceed against the surety,

(2) that there was no mortgage of his property by the surety and that the proper procedure to enforce the liability of the surety under the bond was to proceed in execution by sale of the hypothecated property. A ATA HUSAIN v MUSTAFA HUSAIN 546

Held, (1) that the High Court having passed a final order in the case remanding the case to the District Court, was functus officio and could not, therefore, make any order adding parties to the case,

(2) that as regards the appeal to the Privy Council the High Court had no powers beyond those given in O XLV of the C P C, and that there was, in that order, no power to add parties,

A plaintiff must be confined to the case that he sets up in his pleadings, or to a case which is consistent with those pleadings

Amendment of pleadings is a matter for the discretion of the Court and that discretion must be exercised with regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case.

The causes of action on which a person can claim to be a kittima or an appathitta son are widely different, and different considerations govern the question of these two distinct forms of adoption.

Where a plaintiff comes into a Court on the basis of a kittima adoption and fails to prove the case set up by him, he cannot be allowed to amend his plaint so as to base his claim on an appathitta adoption. R MAUNG BA THEIN v. MA THAN MYINT, 3 R. 483; A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 49 253

It is not an invariable rule that the absence of a Plead owing to his engagement elsewhere is a sufficient cause for setting aside an ex parte decree, but the High Court will not in revision interfere with the discretion of the Court of first instance in setting aside an ex parte decree on that ground.

Where a plaintiff impleaded several persons as parties to a suit on the ground that they were severally in possession of the assets of a deceased person, and an ex parte decree was passed against all of them, on an application by some only of the defendants to set aside the ex parte decree

Held, that it was not open to the Court to set aside the decree as against the defendants who had not applied to set aside the decree. M THIRUMALACHARIAR v. ATHIMOOLA KARAYALAR, 22 L. W. 695, (1926) M. W. N. 112, A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 256 776

Security bond by judgment-debtor—Security, enforceability of, in execution—Hindu father, decree against—Sons of judgment-debtor also joining as parties to security bond, effect of.

Immoveable properties given by a judgment-debtor as security pursuant to an order made under O. XX, r. 11, cl. (2), C. P. C., can be realised by the decree-holder in execution, unless there is anything in the security bond or the order of Court which precludes the security from being enforced in execution.

Where the parties intended that the properties covered by the security bond should be realised in execution, the decree-holder is not bound to resort to a separate suit for the purpose.

The provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 14, C. P. C., are inapplicable to such a case and do not operate as a bar to the enforcement of the security bond in execution.

It would make no difference in the above case if a Hindu father alone is the judgment-debtor but the security bond is executed by the father and his undivided sons, as the latter could question the debt only if it were tainted with illegality or immorality.

The words "claim arising under the mortgage" have been substituted in O. XXXIV, r. 14, C. P. C., for the words "any claim whether arising under the mortgage or not" in the repealed s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. The effect of the alteration is to confine the prohibition against bringing the mortgaged property for sale, except by bringing a suit, to cases where a mortgagee has obtained a personal decree against the mortgagor on the mortgage-debt. The mortgage or charge mentioned in O. XXXIV, r. 14 must be a mortgage or charge existing prior to the decree and not created by the decree or one created by the act of parties subsequent to the decree. *M. OFFICIAL RECEIVER v. An agreement by a decree-holder not to execute the decree amounts to an adjustment or satisfaction of the decree and unless it is certified in accordance with the provisions of r. 2 of O. XXI, C. P. C., it cannot be recognised by the Executing Court as a bar to execution. R M S S OHETTYAR FIRM v. MA TIN TIN, A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 349, 4 Bur. L. J. 179 677

Where it declines to adopt the latter course, it cannot be held to have refused jurisdiction so as to warrant interference in revision under s. 115, C. P. C. M THARAMAL PARKAM KALAPATHOOR v. URUPPOYL AMBU, 49 M. L. J. 699, (1925) M. W. N. 917, A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 260 109

Under the terms of a deed of partition between two brothers L and R, a sum of money fell to L's share but was retained with R. A creditor of L attached before judgment the debt so due and ultimately obtained a decree. L thereupon sued R on the debt, obtained a decree and within a month thereafter reported satisfaction of the decree. In an application for execution by the attaching creditor:

Held, (1) that the attaching creditor was not bound either by the alleged payment by R or by the recording of satisfaction by L and was entitled to execute the decree;

(2) that the attaching creditor should be permitted to amend his petition by adding a prayer thereto for the attachment of the decree obtained by L against R.

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J. (Reilly, J. dissenting)—The attachment placed on a debt fastens itself on a decree obtained on that debt without any further act on the part of the attaching creditor. The debt matures into and merges in the decree and the attachment gets naturally transferred from the debt to the decree.

The creditor who has attached the debt but who has failed to attach the decree is nevertheless entitled to execute it as if he had attached the decree also. To such a case the provisions of s. 146, C. P. C., will clearly apply.

Per Reilly, J.—What an attaching creditor gets when a debt is attached at his instance is an order prohibiting the creditor from recovering it and the debtor paying it. He acquires by that order no right to sue on the debt or to collect it or to give a valid discharge of it. The prohibitory order which he obtains cannot grow or ripen into or be converted into something quite different, namely, the right to execute a decree obtained on the debt. It is, therefore, necessary for the creditor to attach the decree before proceeding to execution. M ALAGIRISAMI PILLAI v. LAKSMANAN CHETTY, 50 M. L. J. 79, A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 371 1021

Where an objection is raised by a transferee from the judgment-debtor to attachment of the property in execution of a money-decree, and the question arises whether the transfer in favour of the objector is good or not, the question relates to the title to the property sought to be attached, and comes within the purview of O. XXI, r. 58, C. P. C., and the decision is final, subject to the result of any suit that might be instituted, and is not open to appeal. The fact that the property attached is a decree makes no difference.

Where an objection to an attachment of certain property in execution of a decree, by a person claiming to be a transferee of the property from the judgment-debtor, is dismissed on the ground that the transfer was intended to defeat the creditors of the judgment-debtor and was fraudulent, and the unsuccessful objector brings a suit to establish his title to the property, the burden lies upon him of proving not merely the passing of adequate consideration and his possession over the property but also his own good faith.

Where, however, consideration and possession are established a much lighter burden lies on the plaintiff with regard to the establishment of good faith.

In such a case, however, the all essential point is whether the plaintiff was a party to the fraud on the creditors. An intention to defeat the creditors may well exist on the part of the transferor, and yet the transfer will be valid unless the transferee was also a party to the fraud. N VANAYAK v. KANIRAM, A. Estoppel—Compromise

A judgment-debtor filed an application under O. XXI, r. 90, C P C for withholding confirmation of the sale in execution owing to certain irregularities. Subsequently he applied under r. 89 for leave to avoid the sale by deposit of 5 per cent. of the purchase-money. Both applications came for hearing on the same day, and the Pleader for the purchaser represented that the judgment-debtor could not maintain his second application unless he withdrew his first one. The judgment-debtor, thereupon, withdrew his application under r. 90 and his application under r. 89 was granted by the Court.

It was urged by the purchaser in appeal that the application under r. 89, made in the presence of the application under r. 90, being void ab initio, the withdrawal of the application under r. 90 would only leave it open to the judgment-debtor to make a new application under r. 89. He could not by withdrawal of his application under r. 90 give retrospective validity to his application under r. 89.

Held, that the appellant was not entitled to call in question the order of the lower Court allowing the respondents' application under r. 89 in the light of the statement of his Pleader which statement either amounted to a compromise in the proceedings or to an admission which would estop the applicant from questioning the validity of the Court's order O CHANDOO v. Where, in execution of a decree, certain property is sold as belonging to the judgment-debtor, the latter is entitled to maintain an application to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity in the publication and conduct of the sale, and the application cannot be thrown out on the ground that the judgment-debtor had prior to the date of the auction sold the property to a third person and had thus ceased to have an interest in the property M MUHAMMAD MOHIDEEN MARACAYAK v. Within thirty days from the date of an auction-sale, the judgment-debtor applied to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity in the publication and conduct of the sale which had resulted in the property being sold for a very small sum. After the expiry of thirty days the judgment-debtor made another application pointing out that two heavy encumbrances had been shown in the sale proclamation, whereas no such encumbrances existed on the date of the proclamation. The First Court found that this was a fact and on that ground set aside the sale. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court holding that the First Court was not authorised to look into the matters contained in the later application inasmuch as that application had been made more than thirty days after the sale, set aside the order made by the First Court.

Held, (1) that the later application merely supplied additional particulars of the material irregularity alleged in the first application and that the lower Appellate Court, therefore, had jurisdiction to consider the allegations made in the later application.

(2) that the refusal of the lower Appellate Court to consider the later application amounted to material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction and that the order of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be set aside in revision A RAM SARAN DAS v. A decree becomes dead as soon as it is satisfied as between the parties to it, but that cannot affect the vested rights of others.

There is nothing in r. 97 of O. XXI of the C. P. C., which prevents its being applicable to a decree for possession passed under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. Such a decree does not purport to decide any question of title but it declares the plaintiff's possessory right and is a conclusive determination of that right. Where, therefore, obstruction is offered to the delivery of possession in execution of such a decree, an order removing the obstruction falls within the purview of r. 98 of O. XXI, and is conclusive unless set aside in a suit brought in accordance with the provisions of r. 103 of O. XXI.

Such an order does not become appealable even though the Court decides any question as between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor which would really be quite foreign to the proceedings.

In proceedings under O. XXI, r. 98, C. P. C., taken by an auction-purchaser against the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder qua the decree-holder is really not a party. The question is merely between the judgment-debtor and the auction-purchaser, and any questions that might arise between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder cannot be raised, and any decision passed relating to them is not binding as between them under s. 47 of the Code. C SORENDRA NATH DAS GUPTA v. After the sale had taken place, he made an application for an order declaring that he was not liable to eviction inasmuch as no notice under O. XXI, r. 66 had been issued to him.

Held, that inasmuch as the relief sought against the defendants in the plaint was joint and indivisible, the appeal must be held to have abated in toto and that it was not open to the plaintiff to urge that as the defendants claimed to be in possession as the reversionary heirs of the last male-holder the appeal should be held to have abated only with regard to the deceased respondents' share in the estate of the last male-holder according to the pedigree-table set up by the defendants. L CHET RAM v ILAICHO, 2 L O 178 35 for declaration of his right to the property and for delivery of possession. Both these suits were filed within a year of the date of the order on the claim petition. B withdrew the first suit as being unnecessary with the permission of the Court, the order allowing withdrawal not mentioning whether it was with or without liberty to bring a fresh suit. A now took the objection that the second suit was not maintainable as B was precluded from agitating the question of setting aside the claim petition therein by the withdrawal of the first suit.

Held, that a declaration of his title claimed by B in the second suit involved a setting aside of the order on the claim petition, and there being no final adjudication of the matter in the first suit, and the second suit being filed within a year of the order on the claim petition, the suit was maintainable. M RUDRAPPA v MARIAPPA, A I R 1926 Mad 490 385

Under O XXIII, r 3, C P C, where the terms of a compromise are legal and valid, the Court is bound to pass a decree in terms thereof. Where the original parties to the suit thus terminate it by a lawful compromise, it is not competent to the Court to add a third person as party to the proceedings to agitate his rights therein. The remedy of such person who has any right or interest in the subject-matter of the suit is to file a separate suit.

A suit by the plaintiff against a Union Board in respect of the ownership of certain streets in the town was settled by a compromise under which the plaintiff's title to the streets was recognised but the public were to be given access during specified hours in a day. The said compromise was embodied in a resolution of the Board and an application was made by both parties to the Court to pass a decree in terms thereof. The mere absence of a formal order of the appointment of a person as the guardian ad litem of a minor is no ground for holding that the minor was not represented at all in the suit.

The negligence of a guardian to support the case of a minor, in the absence of anything to show that he did so deliberately, will not entitle the minor to avoid the operation of the decree passed therein

The mere omission of a guardian to appear in a suit or execution proceedings does not necessarily amount to gross negligence on the part of the guardian.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

A suit by a person for a declaration that an order dismissing an application filed by his guardian to release his share of the property attached in execution as he was discharged by the decree is null and void, because his guardian was grossly negligent in protecting his interests in execution proceedings, is in reality a suit to set aside the auction-sale held subsequent to the dismissal of the application and is barred under s 47 of the C. In an appeal from a decree in a suit for redemption, the Appellate Court, in remanding the suit, directed accounts to be taken up to the date fixed for redemption. The Trial Court after inquiry found that the mortgage amount deposited was in excess of the amount due to the mortgagee. Accordingly a decree was given to the plaintiff for possession of the suit land. The question of mesne profits was left undecided

Held, (1) that the decree was partly final and partly preliminary, final as to possession and preliminary in so far as the question of mesne profits was left undecided.

(2) that an application, therefore, properly lay under O XXXIV, C P C., for the ascertainment of mesne profits M MATAPALLI VENKATARATNAM v. VEPPU SITARAMAYYA, A I R. 1926 Mad. 305 314

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

A decree directing that if the decretal amount is not paid within a certain period, the decree shall be realised by the sale of the hypothecated property and in case that is not sufficient, from the person and property of the debtor, is not a preliminary decree for sale under r 4 of O XXXIV, C P C, and is capable of execution.

Even though a relief may not have been granted by the decree, yet if in execution proceedings a Court holds that a party is entitled to such relief under the decree, it is not open to the parties afterwards to contend that no such relief has been awarded and the matter is res judicata.

The words 'any person' in O. XL, r. 1 (b), C. P C., refer to persons interested in the property and in possession or custody of it prior to the passing of an order appointing a Receiver.

The selection and appointment of a particular person as a Receiver is a matter of judicial discretion to be determined by the Court according to the circumstances of the case.

It is a settled rule that one of the parties to a cause should not be appointed Receiver without the consent of the other parties unless a very special case is made out.

On an application for the removal of a Receiver, the Court should properly consider his past relations to the parties as well as his present sympathies. If by reason of interest shown by the Receiver as an officer of the Court his efficiency is impaired the Court will be justified in removing him. C SRIPATI DUTTA v. An appeal is a creature of Statute and unless the right of appeal is specially conferred by some law, no one has a right to appeal.

The operative part of r 4 of O XL, C P C, is the part which enables the Court to attach and sell the Receiver's property, cls (a), (b) and (c) of the rule give only the grounds on which such an order can be made. Unless, therefore, an order is made under the operative part of the rule, no appeal would lie under r 1 (s) of O XLIII of the Code.

An order of remand by a Court of Appeal in a case where the Trial Court has disposed itself of all the issues and given a decree on those findings cannot come within the scope of O XLI, r. 23, C P C, and is, therefore, not appealable.

A Court of Appeal acts without jurisdiction if it remands "the whole case" while it wants further evidence only on two issues. The proper course in such circumstances is to direct the Trial Court to take the requisite further evidence and submit it to the Appellate Court for recording its own findings. M VENKATARAMA AYYAR v. ## Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Where an Appellate Court sets aside a judgment of the Trial Court which has been given on the merits and remands the case for a fresh trial on the ground that a necessary party has not been impleaded as a defendant to the suit, the order of remand does not fall within the purview of r. 23, O. Where a matter in dispute in a suit is referred to arbitration through the Court and the parties privately request the arbitrator to decide a matter which is extraneous to the suit, his decision on the latter cannot be embodied in the decree to be passed in the suit, but there is nothing to prevent the parties from enforcing the award relating to the extraneous matter in a separate suit M NARAYANASWAMI IYENGAR v THIPPAYYA, (1926) M. In a pending suit a Court has no power to refer to arbitration any questions between the parties to the suit other than those in question in the suit, or any questions in which any one not a party to the suit is concerned.

It is incumbent upon arbitrators acting under an order of reference made under paras. 1 and 2 of Sch. II, C. P. C., to comply strictly with its terms. The Court does not by making the order of reference, part with its duty to supervise the proceedings of the arbitrators acting under the order.

An award made under such an order otherwise than in accordance with the authority conferred upon the arbitrators by the order, is "otherwise invalid" and may be set aside by the Court under para. 15 of Sch. II, C. P. C.

An award made in pursuance of an order of reference made in a pending suit, the conclusions of which are dictated or coloured by the view taken by the arbitrators of other questions between the parties or some of them to which the suit had no reference cannot be upheld. P. Section 215 of the Companies Act lays a duty upon the High Court to see that justice is done in cases of voluntary liquidation.

Under s. 207 (1) of the Companies Act the assets of a Company which is being voluntarily wound up must be applied in satisfaction of its liabilities pari passu. A person who has obtained a decree against such a Company, therefore, cannot be allowed to realise his decree by way of execution inasmuch as to permit him to do so would give him more than his share of the assets of the Company. *O NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA v. s. 235—Directors of Company, decision of—Imprudent act—Personal liability of Directors, when arises—Personal gain acquired by Director—Refund—Managing Director, duties of—Act inspired by personal motives—Liability.

Directors of a Company acting within their powers and with reasonable care, and honestly in the interests of the Company, are not personally liable for losses which the Company may suffer by reason of their mistakes or errors of judgment.

Facts which show imprudence in the exercise of powers conferred upon the Directors of a Company will not subject them to personal responsibility, the imprudence must be so great and manifest as to amount to gross negligence, as for example where the Directors are cognizant of circumstances of such a character, so plain, so manifest, and so simple in operation, that no man with any ordinary degree of prudence acting on his own behalf would have entered into such a transaction as the Directors have entered into. But if the Directors are authorized to do an act in itself imprudent, they are not to be held responsible for the consequences of doing it.

Companies Act—concl'd.

In respect of duties which, having regard to the exigencies of business and the Articles of Association, may properly be left to some other official, the Directors are, in the absence of grounds for suspicion, justified in trusting that official to perform such duties honestly.

The Directors must, however, observe good faith towards their share-holders and towards those who take shares from the Company and become co-adventurers with themselves and others who may join them. The maxim caveat emptor has no application to such cases, and Directors who so use their powers as to obtain benefits for themselves at the expense of the share-holders, without informing them of the fact, cannot retain those benefits and must account for them to the Company so that all the share-holders may participate in them.

The mere fact that the Directors of a Company carrying on a banking business allow advances to be made on the strength of a promise by the debtor to execute a mortgage instead of the mortgage itself, does not amount to an act of misfeasance on the part of the Directors so as to make them personally liable to the extent of the amount of the advances.

Where the Directors of a Bank permit a depositor to make an over-draft and one of the Directors who is a creditor of such depositor receives a portion of the amount represented by the over-draft in payment of the debt due to him by the depositor, such Director cannot be allowed to retain the amount to the detriment of the share-holders and the creditors of the Bank and is liable to refund it to the Bank.

The duties of a Managing Director are of a higher standard than of an ordinary Director, and where by any act of the Managing Director which is inspired by motives of personal gain the Bank suffers loss, the Managing Director is liable to make good such loss. *O S C MITRA v. ### Hire-purchase agreement—Agreement to sell—Property, when passes—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 78.

Under a hire-purchase agreement, in the sense in which it is understood in England, there is no absolute sale of the chattel but only a hiring of it by a person who has the option of returning it at any time before the various instalments are paid. Under such an agreement the property in the chattel does not pass to the purchaser until the whole price has been paid.

An agreement entered into between the parties provided that the plaintiff had agreed to sell to the defendant on the hire-purchase system, for a certain sum of money, a certain number of motor-lorries in consideration of payment of the price by certain instalments settled between the parties. It was also provided that in case of failure to pay any of the instalments on the due date, the previous payments would be considered null and void. The lorries were not to be considered as sold until the final payment was made. The defendant was prohibited from mortgaging or disposing of the lorries until the final instalment was paid and the plaintiff had the right to seize the lorries wherever they may be. A portion of the price was paid at the time of the execution of the agreement and delivery of the lorries was given to the defendant and they were transferred to his name in the registers kept by the Commissioner of Police. Defendant paid some of the instalments and then made default. Plaintiff thereupon brought a suit to recover from the defendant the balance of the unpaid instalments together with damages alleging that the defendant was merely a hirer of the lorries and in the alternative to recover the balance of the price if it was held that the agreement was one of sale.

Held, (1) that the agreement was one of sale providing for the price to be paid by instalments and that the property in the lorries had passed to the defendant on the execution of the document,

(2) that the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled only to claim the balance of the purchase-money which had not been paid by the defendant. B CECIL COLE v. NANALAL MORAJI DAVE, 26 Bom. L. R. 880; A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 18; 49 B. 172 191

Lease, whether agricultural or residential—Heritable lease—Ejectment

A plot of land upon which there were a certain number of fruit-trees was leased to the defendants who were to enjoy the land by erecting houses on it and planting, if they so liked, other fruit-trees. It was provided that the lease should continue to the defendants' heirs, but that if at any time the lessor should require the land he would give notice to the lessees who would give up the land on receipt of the value of fruit-trees, etc.:

Held, (1) that the lease was one for residential and not for horticultural or agricultural purposes and was, therefore, governed by the Transfer of Property Act and not by the Bengal Tenancy Act;

(2) that the rights of the parties must be governed on a construction of the lease itself and that the conduct of the parties after the lease had been entered into could not be taken into consideration;

(3) that the land was to be enjoyed by the defendants from generation to generation so long as the

Mortgage-deed—Compound interest, when can be charged.

A mortgage-deed stated that the mortgage was for a period of four years and that interest would be calculated every two years:

Held, that in the absence of an express stipulation in the deed for payment of compound interest, the deed could not be construed as meaning that compound interest was to be charged after every two years. L PARODH SINGH v. BODH RAJ, 7 L. L. J. 414; A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 603 195

Construction of Statute—Principles applicable

It is an elementary principle of interpretation that the plain intention of the Legislature as expressed by the language employed is to be accepted and given effect to.

If the language admits of more than one construction, the meaning is to be sought not in the wide sea of speculation and surmise but from such conjectures as are drawn from the words alone or something contained in them. N VITHOBA v. SADASHO, A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 253 58

Contract—Repudiation by one party—Remedies of other party—Long delay—Implied abandonment of contract

If one party to a contract repudiates it, the other party may treat the repudiation as inoperative, and at the end of the period of the contract, treat the other party as responsible for all the consequences of non-performance, thereby keeping the contract alive, or, on the other hand, he may treat the repudiation as a wrongful putting an end to the contract, and may at once bring his action as on a breach of it. A promisee cannot, however, both sue upon the breach and also keep the contract open.

Where one party to a contract by acts and conduct evinces an intention no longer to be bound by it, the other party will be justified in regarding himself as having been emancipated.

A party cannot repudiate a contract, wait a long time and then suddenly insist upon its performance, long delay coupled with repudiation will amount to conduct giving rise to an implication of abandonment of the contract. M NARASIMHA MUDALI v. ### s. 23—Abkari license—Prohibition to transfer and to sub-let—Partnership by licensee, whether forbidden—Foreign law—Law of Mysore State—Question of fact transfer or sub-lease of the right is forbidden, the mere fact that the licensee enters into partnership with others in respect of profits or losses of the business for the carrying on of which he had obtained the license does not necessarily involve a transfer of the license right and is not illegal or forbidden by law.

Under the Law of Mysore such a partnership as the above is not unlawful.

When the terms of a contract are reduced to writing and the question is whether the contract is illegal by reason of its seeking to do what is forbidden by law and the contention is that the agreement operates as a transfer, such a transfer should not merely be presumed but must appear in the document if not in terms at least as necessarily involved. M KHODAY GANGADHAR SAH v. s. 23—Agreement not to bid at excise auction, legality of—Public policy—Money paid under agreement not to bid, whether can be recovered—Fraud, plea of—Burden of proof

An agreement not to bid at an excise auction is not per se illegal or opposed to public policy.

Where a plaintiff alleging that he had paid certain money to the defendant on the latter agreeing not to bid against the plaintiff at an excise auction sues to recover the amount paid by him and the defendant pleads that the agreement between him and the plaintiff was illegal under s. 23 of the Contract Act, the burden lies on him to show that it was intended by the agreement to effect the purpose of the agreement by illegal means. It is not sufficient for him to have used indefinite expressions when demanding the money from the plaintiff and then to ask the Court to presume that he had fraudulent intentions of an unspecified or an indefinite kind without his advancing evidence that such was the case. To refuse relief to the plaintiff under such circumstances would be to encourage fraud and trickery of a different kind by a person who had done nothing illegal except possibly to defraud the plaintiff with whom he entered into an agreement of an indefinite kind, with no intention of doing anything except to fraudulently keep the money in any event. R MAUNG SEIN HTIN v. s. 23—Pro-note for withdrawal of non-compoundable case, suit on, whether maintainable—Public policy

It is against public policy to receive money or a promise to receive money in consideration of an agreement to stifle a criminal prosecution for a non-compoundable offence.

Plaintiff was prosecuting one K for a non-compoundable offence, and in consideration of the defendant executing a pro-note in his favour for a certain sum of money withdrew the complaint with the permission of the Court. In a suit to recover the amount of the pro-note:

Thereafter his connection with the chit fund ceased altogether and he was not under any obligation to continue his subscriptions. According to the rules of the fund, the drawing would thus go on for 50 months when the chit fund would be wound up, the stakeholder paying back to the remaining subscribers the total amount subscribed by each of them. In a suit by a non-prize-winner after subscribing for 48 instalments for return of amount of subscription with interest

Held, that the chit fund transaction was a lottery and the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the amount either by virtue of the contract or by reason of any obligation under s. 65 of the Contract Act as if the contract had become void. M VEERANAN AMBALAM v. A common channel which irrigated the lands of the plaintiff and the defendant was repaired by the plaintiff after giving notice to the defendant and the latter was benefited by the repairs, it was also found that the plaintiff did not intend to bear all the expenses of the repairs himself.

Section 73 of the Contract Act does not necessarily exclude the application of the rule laid down in Bain v. Fothergill, (1874) 7 H. L. 158, 43 L. J. Ex. 243; 31 L. T. 387; 23 W. R. 261 that normally apart from deliberate carelessness or known want of title by a vendor, a purchaser cannot recover damages for loss of his bargain under a contract for the sale of real estate, apart from costs of investigating the title. The question must be answered on the facts and circumstances of each case whether that rule would apply to that particular case.

In an ordinary contract for the purchase and sale of land in which the vendor contracts to make out a marketable title, the usual result would be, if without any default on the part of the vendor he was unable to make out a marketable title, that the bargain would be off and the vendor would have to pay the purchaser's costs of the agreement and of the inspection of the title-deeds. But if the conduct of the vendor in committing the breach shows that he has been guilty of any default of a wilful nature, then the damages would be calculated on a higher scale, and the measure of damages would be the difference between the contract price and the market price of the property at the date of the breach.

Per Fawcett, J.—It is not the profit which would have arisen to the plaintiffs, which is to be taken into account, but the market price of the property on the date of the breach.

The discretion which a Court has under s. 73, Contract Act, cannot properly be restricted by any Judge-made rule that every case of a particular kind must be dealt with in a particular manner.

The circumstances of each case have to be considered in deciding what is reasonable and proper compensation for the damage, caused by a breach of contract under s. 73 of the Contract Act and the Court is not bound in every case to award damages on the basis of a difference between the price at the date of the contract and the market price at the date of the breach.

In a case where the plaintiff has no very outstanding circumstances to support his claim to damages on a higher scale, the fact of the contract being made under conditions similar to those obtaining in England is a factor which can reasonably be taken into account. B DHANRAJGIRJI NARASINGGIRJI v TATA SONS LTD, 26 Bom L R 858; A I R 1924 Bom 473, 49 B 1 225

A penalty under s. 74 of the Contract Act can only follow some breach of contract or obligation.

The doctrine of penalties is not applicable to stipulations contained in decrees. Those who, with their eyes open, have made alternative engagements and invited alternative orders of the Court, must, if they fail to perform the one, perform the other, however greatly severe its terms may be.

An ejection suit was compromised and the compromise decree provided that the defendants would be entitled to occupy the premises in suit for a period of eleven years on payment of a yearly rent of Rs. 400 and that if they wanted to occupy the premises after the expiry of the term, without taking a fresh settlement, they shall pay rent at Rs. 100 per month.

Held, that the intention of the parties was that if the defendants wanted to occupy the premises after the expiry of the term, they could either take a fresh settlement or remain in occupation without a fresh settlement on a rent of Rs. 100 per month which the parties at that time thought would be a fair rent

A person who without enquiry takes from another an instrument signed in blank by a third party and fills up the blanks cannot, even in a case of a negotiable instrument, claim the benefit of being a purchaser for value without notice so as to acquire a greater right than the person from whom he himself received the instrument.

The obtaining of goods or documents by fraud of which the proviso to s. 178 of the Contract Act speaks must mean obtaining possession by such a trick or fraud as excludes real consent and, therefore, cannot be the foundation of any other contract.

Defendant No. 1 who was a partner in a firm which had been dissolved represented to defendant No. 2 that his liabilities in respect of his partnership in the dissolved firm did not exceed a certain sum and induced defendant No. 2 to enter into a partnership with him for the purpose of starting a new business. Defendant No. 2 handed over shares in certain companies to defendant No. 1, together with transfer forms with blank transfers duly signed by him, and authorized the first defendant to borrow money on the shares for the purpose of the new business to be started by them. The first defendant pledged the shares with the plaintiff and utilized the proceeds to discharge his liabilities as a partner in the dissolved firm. In a suit by the plaintiff to enforce the pledge of the shares

Held, (1) that the first defendant having been authorized by the second defendant to pledge the shares it could not be said that he had obtained possession of the shares by means of an offence or fraud;

(2) that at the most it could only be said that the first defendant induced the second defendant to negotiate with him with regard to starting a new business by misrepresenting the amount of his liabilities in his old business and that such a misrepresentation would enable the second defendant to avoid

Order VII, r. 1, C P C., requires that a plaint shall contain a statement of the value of the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of Court-fees. It is not contemplated that the subject-matter shall be given two values, one purely arbitrary and fanciful for the purposes of jurisdiction, and one in strict conformity to the real value for the purposes of Court-fees.

In either case the valuation should conform to reality. Therefore when a plaint contains a valuation

The principle of the Court Fees Act is that the plaintiff should pay a Court-fee in proportion to the value of the relief he seeks. That value if possible, is determined in money but where there is no money value or the money value is uncertain, the Act provides rules according to which the valuation shall be made.

The value of an appeal is not in all cases the value of the suit as originally filed, but may be the value of the relief granted by the decree which the appellant wishes to get rid of.

Where in a suit for redemption of a kanom, a decree for possession was passed on payment of the amount of mortgage and the value of improvements and an appeal was filed which related only to the value of improvements payable.

Held, that s. 7, (ix) of the Court Fees Act was inapplicable and that Court-fee was payable on the memorandum of appeal not on the mortgage amount but ad valorem on the amount in dispute in appeal under Art. 1 of Sch. of the proceedings. The scheme of the enquiry is retrospective and not prospective. There might be certain circumstances in which the parties may agree that the Court should refer the matter in dispute to arbitration for the purpose of deciding the question as to who was in actual possession at the time of the proceedings, but the question as to future possession in such a proceeding cannot be referred to arbitration. The law does not allow delegation of the jurisdiction of the Court under s. 145 to arbitrators. The utmost that the Code allows in a proceeding under s. 145 is that the Court may direct a local enquiry and bring the enquiry report on the record as evidence.

If, however, the Magistrate has before him clear and undeniable evidence that there is no further likelihood of the breach of peace and that the parties have come to a settlement of their dispute, the Magistrate must drop the proceedings. In such a case a compromise between the parties may be taken by the Magistrate as evidence for an order to be passed under cl (5) of s. 145 of the Cr. P. On the conclusion of that trial the Magistrate ordered the Police to prosecute the accused of the original offence and the accused was sent before a Magistrate who committed him to the Sessions Court on charges of kidnapping and murder. On the case coming up for trial, the Sessions Judge noticed the absence of the certificate from the Public Prosecutor required by s. 339 of the Cr. P. C. The trial was adjourned and on the adjourned date a certificate was filed by the Public Prosecutor and was accepted by the Sessions Judge and the trial proceeded and the accused was eventually convicted.

Held, that the proceedings before the Magistrate who made the commitment were merely an enquiry and were not a trial within the meaning of s. 339 of the Cr. P. C., and that it was open to the Sessions Judge to accept the commitment made by the Magis-

A decree-holder filed an application for execution of his decree. In answer to that application the defendant produced what purported to be a receipt in respect of a certain payment which he alleged he had made to the decree-holder and handed up the document to the Judge. The Judge did not place the document on the file on the ground that the date it bore showed that it was out of time for the purpose of evidencing any compromise or payment of the decree, and returned the document to the judgment-debtor. While a Magistrate is bound under s. 257 (1) of the Cr. P. C. to issue process on the application of an accused person who has entered on his defence for compelling the attendance of a witness for the purpose of examination or cross-examination (save in certain stated circumstances which the Magistrate must find and must set forth in writing), the proviso to that section on the other hand definitely prohibits the Magistrate from issuing such process, if the accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining the witness after the charge was framed, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that such attendance is necessary for the purposes of justice, that is to say, unless he is convinced of the existence of the strongest possible grounds for disregarding the prohibition. The exception to the prohibition must not be read as swallowing up the prohibition or the whole proviso as enjoining that the Magistrate shall issue process if he is not satisfied that the attendance of the witness is unnecessary for the ends of justice, or if he is not satisfied that (as in the case of the witnesses not covered by the proviso) the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. On the contrary the prohibition may not be disregarded unless in the opinion of the Magistrate the purposes of justice not merely warrant but demand such disregard. It is not incumbent upon the Magistrate to record in writing his reasons for not being satisfied that the attendance of a witness is necessary for the purposes of justice.

If a good case is made out that the Magistrate's refusal to summon the witness was outside the limits of a reasonable discretion the High Court would interfere with the exercise of such discretion, but the position must be most clearly established that the Magistrate's decision was unreasonable and improper before the interference of the High Court could properly be invoked or expected. *PAT AJO MIAN v. An objection that in delivering his charge to the Jury the Sessions Judge did not read material portions of the evidence is not in itself sufficient for the reversal of the verdict of the Jury. In each case it must be a question whether the omission to read the material portion of the evidence was such as to mislead the Jury and the Court of Appeal will not interfere if it has not prejudiced the accused.

The omission to tell the Jury that the accused is entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt is not a misdirection vitiating the trial, though as a matter of practice it is as well to always end the charge with these words. N RAHIMBEQ v. EMPEROR, 7 N. L. J. 208; A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 154, 27 Cr. L. J. 217 169

The object of a summing up under s. 297, Cr. P. C., is to enable the Judge to place before the Jury the facts and circumstances of the case both for and against the prosecution so as to help them in arriving at a right decision upon the points which arise for their consideration.

It is not the province of the Judge to find the facts for the Jury and then make an attempt to persuade them to accept his conclusions as correct.

A Judge's charge to the Jury must be recorded in such a way as would enable the High Court sitting as a Court of Appeal to judge whether the facts and circumstances of the case had been properly placed before the Jury and also whether the law had been correctly explained to them.

A mere statement in the heads of charge that the Judge explained certain sections of the Penal Code to the Jury does not satisfy the above requirement.

Where several accused persons are being jointly tried and the case as against all of them does not stand on the same footing and their defences are also different, the Judge must ask the Jury to consider the case as against each of the accused individually. The Judge's failure to do so is a very serious omission and is likely to prejudice the accused persons.

A verdict obtained from the Jury without placing before them an important piece of evidence in favour of the defence, whatever may have been its real worth, cannot be sustained.

The earliest version of an occurrence as given by an informant or prosecutor who is the principal witness to the occurrence, and on whose testimony practically the whole case depends, must always be placed before the Jury in order to enable them to judge of the truth or falsity of the prosecution case. *C KHJIR- UDDIN v. Cr. P. The High Court has power to grant bail under s. 426 (2) of the Cr. P. C., after an application for the same made after a conviction by a Magistrate has been rejected by the Sessions Judge. But the Court will only interfere with the discretion exercised by the Sessions Judge in refusing bail if that discretion was manifestly wrong or if in fact no discretion has been exercised.

The principle which should guide the High Court in dealing with such an application, is whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that the applicant has committed the offence in question.

Although the High Court has unfettered powers to grant bail, yet in exercising these powers the High Court ought to have regard to the limitations imposed on lower Courts in this connection.

The mere previous respectability of a man is per se no sufficient reason for granting bail after he has been convicted of a criminal offence.

The question of grant of bail is not only to be dealt with from the point of view of there being likelihood or not of the accused person absconding.

In the absence of very special cause, no order for a suspension of sentence should be passed, as the result of such an order is that if the appeal fails finally the convicted person only serves the original period of his sentence less the period of suspension. N SHAIKH KARIM v. It is not open to the Judicial Commissioner's Court under s 439 of the Cr. P. C. to alter or interfere with a conviction which has been arrived at by a Judge of the Court, as ss 435 to 439 of the Code clearly contemplate interference only with the findings, sentences or orders of any inferior Court.

Where, however, a Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court hearing an appeal against a conviction, alters the conviction to one for a graver offence, but does not himself enhance the sentence, but suggests an action in that behalf by the Local Government, his judgment is not final from that point of view and the Judicial Commissioner's Court does not become a functus officio and is competent to hear application on behalf of the Local Government for enhancement of the sentence.

If a finding of a Sessions Judge for culpable homicide has been altered by the Appellate Court to one for murder, it is open to the Judicial Commissioner's Court sitting as a Court of Revision to pass a legal sentence for the offence of murder.

The proper construction to be put on s 439 (4), Cr. P. C., is that it refers to cases where there has been a complete acquittal and not to cases where there has been only an alteration of findings by the Appellate Court, the conviction by the Sessions Court being kept in tact.

It is open to a Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, who hears an appeal against a conviction and who comes to the conclusion that a graver offence has been committed, not only to alter the conviction but to proceed on the revisional side to issue notice to the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, and, if no sufficient cause is shown, to enhance the sentence accordingly. N LOCAL GOVERNMENT v. — s. 439—Acquittal—Revision—Interference by High Court.

Per Mullick, J.—The power of interference in revision with orders of acquittal should be most sparingly exercised and only in cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice, for instance, where an order of acquittal has been made without trial and under an error of law. The High Court will not in any case interfere in revision with an order of acquittal on the ground that the inferences drawn by the lower Court from evidence are erroneous.

The Legislature does not intend that a private party shall secure by an application in revision a right which is reserved for the Crown only. The High Court has the right to interfere in revision with orders of acquittal, but will only do so in very exceptional cases, for instance, where there has been a denial of the right of fair trial.

Per Macpherson, J.—The High Court will, in exercising its power of revision against an order of acquittal under s. 439 of the Cr. P. C., observe the limitations which established practice has imposed upon appeals under s. 417 of the Code. But though in practice the broad rule of guidance that the Court will only interfere in revision with an acquittal, at least in a case where there has been a trial, sparingly and only where interference is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice, may be accepted, no general rule can be laid down beyond this that the Court will interfere where the circumstances require it: PAT SIBAN RAI v. The power conferred upon a Court under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. to make a complaint to a Magistrate when any of the offences referred to in s. 195, cls. (b) and (c), appears to have been committed in or in relation to a judicial proceeding before it, is exercisable even after the termination of the proceeding in which the offence complained of is said to have been committed.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to within what time a complaint should be made under s. 476. If a Court after the lapse of a considerable time makes a complaint under s. 476 such complaint is open to the objection that it was made after an undue delay. Each case would depend upon its own circumstances.

The effect of the changes made in the Cr. P. Where the Public Prosecutor has charge of a prosecution, a Pleader instructed by a private person, including the Agent of a Railway Administration, must act under the directions of the Public Prosecutor.

ordinary law, such custom must be proved to be ancient, continuous, certain and reasonable and, being in derogation of the general rule of law, must be construed strictly. A custom must be satisfactorily proved by evidence of particular instances so numerous as to justify the Court in finding in favour of the custom.

When the custom is proved to exist it supersedes the general law which, however, still regulates all outside the custom.

Per Ashworth, J.—A custom must be unequivocally stated and proved but it does not follow that it cannot be proved by inference. Inference is one of the methods of proof and in the case of custom there is no reason to reject a clearly logical inference against which no consideration prevails.

Per Raza, J. (Ashworth, J., dissenting)—One instance or even four modern instances are not sufficient to prove a family custom.

The existence of a custom of the brothers and nephews of a deceased Hindu succeeding together would not lead to a necessary inference that a custom existed to this effect also on the death of a childless widow. O RAMPAL SINGH v. RAJRANG SINGH, 3 O. W. N. 73, A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 211 126

Succession—"Malik", meaning of—Widow, estate taken by—Kayasthas of village Khanpur Khabura, District Rai Bareilly

Where a devisee or a donee is described as a 'malik,' he has a full right of alienation unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conferred.

A clause in a wajib-ul-arz relating to the succession to the estate of a deceased proprietor ran as follows—"If included amongst the wives one wife has sons and the others have none then such wives as have no sons shall take shares for the period of their lives, and after the deaths of such wives the sons of the other wives shall be malik of such shares and if there be no wife with sons, then the wives of the deceased shall become malik over the inheritance of the deceased in equal shares"

A Settlement Officer in recording custom in a wajib-ul-arz has to perform duties which the Government orders him to perform. One of these duties is to record customs as the Settlement Officer finds them and not as he might think they ought to be. When, therefore, it is not shown by reliable evidence that the Settlement Officer neglected to perform his duty or was misled in recording a custom, and it does not appear that the statement of the custom is ambiguous, the record in a wajib-ul-arz of a custom is most valuable evidence of the custom, much more reliable evidence than subsequent oral evidence given after a dispute as to the custom has arisen. *O SARTAJ KORA v. The rule that no decree can be passed in a suit brought on a document which has been materially altered after execution without the privity of the party to be affected by it, has no application where the obligation to be enforced does not arise under the altered instrument and the instrument is produced merely as a piece of evidence in proof of the obligation.

Where a cause of action for recovery of money lent to the defendant exists independently of any document which may have been obtained from the defendant in support of the advance, the fact that the document has been materially altered is no ground for dismissing plaintiff's claim for the advance.

An acknowledgment which merely evidences the receipt of a loan does not amount to a contract and does not furnish a cause of action, and a claim in proof of which such an acknowledgment is produced can be decreed despite the fact that the acknowledgment has been materially altered without the consent of the debtor affected by it.

Mere acquiescence cannot deprive a person of his legal rights, unless he has acted in such a way as would make it fraudulent for him to set up those rights. The elements necessary to constitute such fraudulent acquiescence are:—

(1) that the trespasser must have made a mistake as to his legal rights,

(2) that he must have expended some money or must have done some act (not necessarily upon the land of the owner of the legal right) on the faith of his mistaken belief,

(3) that the possessor of the legal right must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the trespasser,

(4) that the possessor of the legal right must know of the trespasser's mistaken belief of his rights,

(5) that the possessor of the legal right must have encouraged the trespasser in his expenditure of money or in the other acts which he has done, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal rights.

Where all these elements exist there is fraud of such a nature as will entitle the Court to restrain the possessor of the legal right from exercising it, but nothing short of all these will do. A JAI NARAIN v. JAFAR BEG, 24 A. L. J. 355

For this reason the law has enacted that a party desiring to cross-examine its own witness has to take the permission of the Court, implying thereby that there is a discretion in the Court whether it would permit the witness to be cross-examined or not. An assignee of a decree made an application for being substituted in place of the decree-holder and for execution of the decree. ## Execution of decree—contd.

Where an auction-sale takes place in the exercise of a jurisdiction vested in a Court, a third party purchaser cannot be bound by the result of any further litigation relating to the decree. Where, however, the terms of a decree itself do not justify a sale of the property, the sale cannot hold good merely because the Court had pecuniary and territorial jurisdiction over the property, even if the auction-purchaser is a bona fide purchaser, in the sense that he is a third party purchaser who had no notice of the facts of the case.

Where a mortgage-decree lays down a condition precedent which must be complied with before the mortgaged property can be sold, and the property is sold without such compliance, the sale cannot be allowed to stand.

Where certain property which has been sold in execution of a decree obtained on a prior mortgage is subsequently sold in execution of a decree obtained on a puisne mortgage and the subsequent sale is set aside at the instance of the purchaser at the previous sale in a proceeding to which the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder, the previous purchaser and the subsequent purchaser are all parties, the Court has inherent power to direct the decree-holder to pay back to the auction-purchaser the amount paid by the latter as the price of the property. A ATMA RAM v. On the death of a ward the powers of the guardian as such do cease, and the Court may properly require him to deliver in any accounts in his possession or control

When a ward dies, the Court should generally direct the guardian to deliver the property into Court or to deliver property to some person producing an heirship certificate. In very rare cases the latter precaution might be dispensed with, but in that case the Court would otherwise guarantee the interests of possible claimants. The possible dangers, therefore, from the misuse of the Court's powers under s. 41 (3) of the Guardians and Wards Act in the case of a deceased minor do not seem to be very serious and from their existence it should not be deduced that the Legislature intended that on the ward dying, the guardian should be completely beyond control of the Court in his dealings with the estate of the deceased into possession of which he has come under the order of the Court.

Where the guardian refuses to give full accounts a fine of Rs 25 inflicted on him under s. 45, Guardians and Wards Act, is not inappropriate

An order for accumulative and progressive fine can, however, be levied under s. 45, Guardians and Wards Act, only in the case of recusancy, which is something more than mere disobedience, and if it is intended to use those powers, as a general rule, it is better to fix some date on which the guardian is to comply with the order of the Court or demonstrate why he is unable to do so and that order may properly contain the penalty that if the Court's order is not complied with, fine will be inflicted on the principle of progression as laid down in the section. S FATEHCHAND v PARPATI BAI, 18 S L R 86; A I R. 1925 Sind 269 196

Commercial debts of father—Pious obligation of son—Text of Gautama, whether obsolete.

A debt incurred by a father in the course of a hardware trade carried on by him, is a commercial debt and under the Hindu Law the son is under a pious obligation to discharge the same

Per Coutts Trotter, C J—The text of Gautama which describes a commercial debt as vyavaharika must now be held to have been declared as obsolete.

The particular instances of vyavaharika debts given in the Smritis must be treated as a mere expression of opinion on the part of the authors as to what classes of debts would fall under the general words. A modern Court is, therefore, free in interpreting the general term "vyavaharika" to consider the particular instances given as obsolete under the conditions of the present day M NIDAVOLU ATCHUTAM v. RATNAJI, 23 L W 193, 50 M L J 206, (1926) M W N 258; 49 M. 211, A I R 1926 Mad 323 977

Guardianship and minority—De facto guardian, alienation by, validity of—Burden of proof—Adequacy of price—Court, duty of.

Under the Hindu Law an alienation of a minor's property by a de facto guardian may be valid, if it is otherwise justified. Where, however, a de facto guardian alienates the minor's property in the presence of a legal guardian, the Court must be satisfied that the legal guardian refused to act for the minor and to protect his interest, and that unless the de facto guardian acted for the minor irreparable loss to the minor would have been the result of the inaction of the legal guardian.

It is not for the person who challenges a sale on behalf of a minor to show that the price was inadequate, it is for the guardian to show that he made all possible endeavours to sell the property at a proper price and that the price which he obtained was the best possible procurable one.

In a case where the interest of the minor is concerned, the case ought not to be decided simply on the questions raised by the parties, but the Court has to satisfy itself, in the interest of the minor, that the sale was a proper sale and the Court must insist upon the purchaser to satisfy it that circumstances justifying a sale of the minor's property did really exist. C BAIKUNTHA NATH KAR v. Guardianship and minority—De facto guardian, alienation by, validity of—Necessity—Benefit to estate—Ratification by minor on attaining majority, effect of.

Under the Hindu Law, the powers of a de facto guardian of a minor are the same as those of a de jure guardian and an alienation of the minor's property by a de facto guardian is equally binding on the minor if it is supported by necessity or benefit to the estate.

An alienation by a de facto guardian not for a binding purpose is not per se void but only voidable and becomes valid where it is ratified by the minor on attaining majority.

Per Viswanatha Sastru, J.—There is nothing in the Hindu Law which limits the guardianship of a minor to the father, mother and failing them the King. A maternal uncle in Hindu society in Southern India is a fit and proper person to act as guardian of a minor. M VEMULAPALLI SEETHARAMAMMA v. MAGANTI APPIAH, 23 L. W. 285; (1926) M. W. N. 238, A. I. Where a person purchases property from a de facto manager of a joint Hindu family and there is

The manager of a joint Hindu family has power to sell or mortgage "on reasonable commercial terms" joint family property, so as to bind the interests of adult as well as minor co-parceners in the property, provided that in the case of minor members the sale or mortgage is made for legal necessity including debts incurred for family business or for benefit of the family.

The managing member of a joint Hindu family executed a mortgage of certain family properties for purposes binding on the family but recited in the mortgage-deed that the mortgaged properties were his absolute properties. In a suit on the mortgage

Held, that since the mortgage purported to be of the entire interest in the properties and the mortgagor had the legal capacity to execute a mortgage of the entire interest binding on the family, the interest mortgaged was of the entirety which the executant was capable of conveying and not merely of his share in the properties and the recital that the executant was the owner must be treated as surplusage. M UNNAMALAI AMMAL v. The proposition that where the property of a Hindu joint family has passed out of the family in execution of a decree and rights of a third party have come in, the sale cannot be set aside unless it is established that the debt was tainted with illegality or immorality, applies only to cases where the persons who challenge the transaction are sons or grandsons of the transferor. It is only when the transfer has been made by a father or grandfather that the question of the debt having been tainted with immorality or illegality can arise. No such consideration arises when the transfer has been made by an uncle and a mere manager of a joint Hindu family. In such cases the transfer, unless it is supported by legal necessity, cannot be upheld. A NANAK CHAND v. KAM PRASAD, A. I. R. 1926 All. 250 316

Where a co-parcener executes a deed of further charge, in which he recites earlier deeds of further charge executed by other co-parceners, he should be inferred to have admitted their validity in every respect, and cannot be allowed subsequently to set up that the earlier deeds were for an excessive rate of interest. *O CHANDRIKA PRASAD v. — Succession to trusteeship—Usage—Management by single individual—Confiscation by State and re-grant, effect of, on rule of succession

The Rajahs of Tanjore had time after time endowed and founded certain devasthanams and other charities. These had continued in the possession and management of the Rajah for the time being and till the death of the last ruler, the office was always held by a single individual. After the death of the last ruler in 1855, when the Raj itself was seized by the East India Company as an act of State, the Pagodas and the devasthanams were also taken possession of and managed by the Government. In 1863, K, the senior widow of the late Rajah, applied for and got possession of the devasthanams and other trust properties as the head of the family, but the course of succession was not indicated in the Government's order of restoration. On her death, the trust estate was managed by the widow who in turn became the senior Rani and so on until the last of the Ranis died in 1912. Disputes then arose between the illegitimate sons of the late Rajah and the sons of an adopted son as to succession both as to the private estate of the Rajah and as to the management of the trust. The private estate was directed to be partitioned. On the question of the rule of succession to the trust estate

Held, that since the founders of the institutions intended that their successors who occupied the Raj should continue to have the sole management of the temples and pagodas and the endowments attached to them and since the Government by restoring the properties to the Rani as "head of the family for the time being" indicated their intention that they should continue to be managed by a sole trustee, the trusteeship was not liable to be divided and the elder grandson was solely entitled to the trusteeship of the devasthanams and the charities.

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—In cases of succession to religious institutions, the main question to be considered is what is the usage of the institutions, and where from the date of the foundation of the charities up to the date of the suit, the trust was managed by a single individual who was the head of the family not in possession of any partible property, the office must be treated as impartible and not liable to be held by more than one person at a time.

In cases of confiscation and re-grant of property which is impartible, the law is that in the absence of anything in the re-grant, the property which is re-granted is subject to the old incident of impartibility. *M ATISWARYANANDAJI SAHEB v. — Reversioner, transfer by, during lifetime of widow, validity of—Reversioner accepting transfer from other reversioner—Estoppel—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115.

A transfer made by a next reversioner during the lifetime of a Hindu widow who is in possession of her deceased husband's estate is inoperative under the Hindu Law, as during the widow's lifetime a reversioner has no interest in the estate capable of transfer but merely an expectancy.

Where, therefore, a reversioner of a deceased Hindu accepts a mortgage of certain property forming part of the estate of the deceased from some other reversioners, he is not estopped from subsequently contending that he has a share in the property which was mortgaged to him, inasmuch as the mortgage is a void transaction and no estoppel can arise out of such a transaction. *O Deo KALI v. Widow—Accretions—Limited title of husband—Acquisition of fuller title—Admission by widow—Reversioners, whether bound—Decree on admission, effect of.

Accretions made by a Hindu widow to her husband's estate partake of the nature of that estate. It is of little moment whether this rule of law is one of Hindu Law or is based on s 90 of the Trusts Act. The rule has been ascribed to the doctrine of graft.

Where a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's property, in which the latter had an estate of a limited nature, obtains a fuller estate in the property, the fuller title is an accretion to her estate as a widow and cannot be regarded as her stridhan.

There is a presumption in law that a person takes possession under title rather than as a trespasser and, on the death of her husband, a Hindu widow taking possession of her husband's property must be held to do so as a Hindu widow.

A Hindu widow cannot make an admission in derogation of the rights of the reversioners which has or may have the effect of destroying the estate of the reversioners. This is governed by the same rule as applies to wrongful alienation. A decree of a Court based (without contest) on such an admission is as void or voidable as the admission. O RAM SHANKAR SINGH v. LAL BAHADUR SINGH, 3 O. W. N. 267, A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 277; 13 O. L. J. 216 637

A Hindu widow has an absolute right of disposal over the income of the property which she inherits from her husband. She can either spend the same or accumulate it for her own benefit. In cases where she purchases properties or invests her savings and indicates by her conduct an intention that the properties purchased out of her savings should form part of her husband's estate, such savings should follow the same rules as regards devolution to her husband's estate, and should be treated as accretions to the estate. Where she does not do so, she has absolute powers of disposal over such property and can sell or give the same to anybody she pleases without any right of the reversioners to question her alienations. Where the question is one of intention to be deduced or inferred from her conduct, the presumption is that she intends to keep the property for her own absolute benefit and to have absolute powers of disposal over it. Where, however, a widow is not in possession of her husband's estate, there is no presumption that any of the properties which she gets are to be treated as accretions to her husband's estate. On her death such properties would follow the same course of succession as her stridhanam properties.

Per Spencer, J.—It is a question of fact in each case whether a widow has dealt with the income of her husband's property in such a manner as to make it an accretion to the corpus. M AYISWARYANANDAJI SAHEB v. SWAJI RAJA SAHEB, 49 M. L. J. 568, A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 84; 49 M. 116 928

In a suit by the reversioners of a deceased Hindu to challenge an alienation made by the widow of the deceased, brought after the lapse of many years from the date of the alienation, it is incumbent on the Court, in weighing the evidence on either side, to remember the difficulty under which the respective parties labour, particularly as regards the ascertainment and production of evidence on the matters dealt with in the case.

If an alienee from a Hindu widow before embarking on the transaction has made reasonable and bona fide enquiry and has satisfied himself to the best of his knowledge and belief that legal necessity exists, the real existence of such legal necessity in point of fact is not a condition precedent to his success in a suit brought by the reversioners of the widow's deceased husband to challenge the alienation. N SHANKAR v. PANDURANG, 9 N. L. J. 22 646

Maintenance—Sale of property—Future maintenance.

A Hindu widow is entitled to maintain herself by selling the property inherited from her husband if there is no other means available for her maintenance. She is not bound to starve herself in order to benefit the reversioners.

Under the Hindu Law a widow can alienate her husband's property for paying off the debts incurred for her own maintenance. There is no hard and fast rule that she cannot do it for future maintenance. Each case would depend upon its circumstances.

In a case where there was no other property but a house inherited by a widow and not capable of yielding any appreciable income, and the widow sold it for Rs 600 half of which went towards liquidating a debt incurred for maintenance and the other half was kept by her for maintaining herself with:

Held, that the sale was binding in its entirety upon the reversioner. M KUTHALINGA MUDALIAR v. SHANMUGA MUDALIAR, 50 M. L. J. 234; 23 L. W. 373; (1926) M. W. N. 274 989

It is a question of intention in each case, to be gathered from the deed of partition, if any; and the surrounding circumstances, whether the widows retained or renounced their rights of survivorship.

It has to be proved by clear evidence that the widows were conscious of the right of survivorship possessed by them, and that they intended to give up such right. M KALIANI ANNI v. THIRUMALAYAPPA MUDALIAR 355

Andalammal during her life and from and after her decease to stand possessed of the said sum and the investments for the time being representing the same upon the Trusts hereinafter declared concerning the residue of my estate. And as to the residue of my estate, I direct that my trustees shall at their discretion invest the same in any of the modes of investment in which trustees are by law authorised to invest trust funds and shall stand possessed of the said residuary trust monies and the investments for the time being representing same (hereinafter called "the residuary trust funds"), in Trust to apportion the residuary trust funds into as many equal parts or shares as there may be daughters of mine living at the time of my decease or who having pre-deceased me shall have left issue, her or them and me surviving and to pay the income of each of such equal parts of shares to my said daughters respectively during their respective lives.

Hindu Law—concl.

And from and after the decease of each of my said daughters to stand possessed of the share of the residuary trust funds so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter upon Trust for all the children of such daughter who shall attain the age of twenty-one years in equal shares and if there shall be only one such child the whole to be in trust for that one child and in the event of any of my said daughters dying without leaving lawful issue her or them surviving, I direct that my trustees shall stand possessed of the share or shares so appropriated to her or them as aforesaid upon Trust for all the children of the other or others of my said daughters who shall attain the age of twenty-one years as tenants-in-common in equal shares per stirpes. Provided always and I hereby declare that if any daughter of mine shall die in my lifetime leaving lawful issue at the time of my death such issue as shall attain the age of twenty-one years shall take and if more than one, as tenants-in-common in equal shares per stirpes the share which would have been so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter of mine and her issue if she had survived me."

Held, (1) that on a proper construction of the Will the three daughters took only for their lives,

(2) that inasmuch as the bequest in favour of the daughters' children, tested as at the testator's death made delay in vesting the estate beyond the lifetime of the daughters and the minority of some of their children possible, the bequest in favour of the children was inoperative having regard to the provisions of s 101 read with s 102 of the Succession Act,

'Obsolete machinery' under the Income Tax Act means machinery which though it is able to perform its function, has become in common parlance out of date and performs its function so indifferently or at such a cost that a prudent man instead of continuing to use such machinery would discard it and instal more labour-saving machines. Income tax is chargeable on the profits of a business and it is immaterial if there is any change in the person who carries on a business, so long as the business is continued.

Section 25 (3) of the Income Tax Act is applicable only to cases in which a business is discontinued entirely and not to cases in which it is transferred from one set of proprietors to another. The question to be decided under the section is whether the business is discontinued and not whether it is discontinued by a particular person

Where a Company carrying on a business sells the business, including the good will and the benefit of all running contracts, to another Company, the ownership and management of the business is changed, but the business is not discontinued, the purchaser Company succeeds to the business and continues it. and plough tax, whether rent.—Right of cultivator to minor produce

Prima facie a tenant, whatever his status as a tenant may be, i.e. whether he is an occupancy tenant or a tenant from year to year or a tenant-at-will, is entitled to the produce of the land included in the tenancy so long as the tenancy subsists.

The lands in a jaghir in certain hilly tracts in the South Arcot District were classified according as the cultivation was permanent or shifting. The revenue of the jaghir was not derived on any system of land assessment. The land which each cultivator cultivated from time to time was not measured and assessed to rent. The cultivators paid a plough tax, an impost of a fixed amount per plough being collected on the number of ploughs a man used. They also paid a poll tax levied on the individuals of the male sex. Each man cultivated where he liked and as much as he liked reclaiming the land by clearing the jungle and leaving it for a new plot when the fertility of the soil was exhausted.

Held, (1) that the revenue described as poll tax and plough tax must be regarded as rent and the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisted between the jaghir and the cultivators,

(2), that in the absence of a custom to the contrary, the cultivators were entitled to the minor produce from the lands brought under actual cultivation and the fact that before cultivating new lands formal permission was taken from the jaghir made no difference. *M. — Muafi, grant of — Transfer, prohibition against, effect of — Grove — Transfer, unauthorised — Forfeiture — Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss 150, 167 — Suit for resumption of grove — Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts

Where land is granted for planting a grove the person who plants the grove acquires, according to the general law, a transferable interest in the land and in the absence of a custom to the contrary, the trees become his property. The person who plants such grove possesses all rights in respect of his grove, which are not excluded by custom or the incidents of the tenure.

Where the grant of a muafi tenure contains a condition restraining the tenure-holder from transferring his right but there is no covenant for re-entry or forfeiture on such transfer, and the muafidar plants a grove, constructs a well and builds other structures of a permanent character upon the land, the landlord cannot claim to re-enter upon the land or forfeit the tenure upon a transfer of the tenure by the grantee.

Per Ashworth, J.—A local custom supersedes the Statute or general law. A local usage does not supersede it but is to be read into the contracts or implied contracts of persons living in the locality to which the usage applies. While a custom depends for its validity on its antiquity, a usage depends for its validity on its notoriety.

A provision in a grant against transfer would be meaningless unless one were to read into it also a provision that it will involve forfeiture. The terms of a grant forbidding transfer must, therefore, entail that the right of reversion operates from the date when possession is given to a third party under an unauthorised transfer.

Sections 150 and 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act only exclude the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in cases of Article 132 of Sch. — Art. 134, scope of—Transfer by mortgagee—Suit for redemption—Honest belief of transferee—Limitation

In every case where Art 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act is set up as a defence by a transferee from a mortgagee, it is material to see what interest the mortgagee purported to transfer, and where both the seller and purchaser honestly believed that the entire interest of an owner was being transferred, the Article is clearly applicable.

Obiter—The omission in Art 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Acts of 1877 and 1908 of the words 'in good faith' which appeared in the corresponding article of the Limitation Acts of 1859 and 1871 now render it unnecessary for a transferee from the mortgagee to prove that he acted in good faith before he can plead limitation.

Per Ramesam, J.—The possible cases that may arise in the case of a transfer by a mortgagee are four :—

(1) Where the transfer on its face purports to be an assignment of the mortgagee's interest only, to such a case Art. 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act can never apply.

(2) Where the transfer purported to be a sale-deed but as a matter of fact only an assignment of the mortgagee's interest was all that was bargained for, to such a case also Art 134 does not apply.

(3) Where the deed of transfer is a sale-deed and what was bargained by the transferee is also an absolute sale, though he knew that the transferor had only a mortgagee's interest, in such a case though under the Limitation Acts of 1859 and 1871, Art. 134

(4) Where the transfer is in the form of a sale-deed and the transferee bargained for an absolute interest and acted bona fide throughout, to such a case there is no doubt that Art. 134 will always apply. M VENKU SHETTITHI v RAMACHANDRAYYA, 49 M. — Sch. I, Arts. 134, 140, 148—Adverse possession during tenure of life-tenant—Remainderman, whether affected—Mortgage—Transfer by mortgagee—Redemption suit by remainderman—Limitation.

Article 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act deals with transfers of property which has been mortgaged. The Article does not specifically require that the property should have been mortgaged with possession. The suits referred to in the Article being, however, suits for possession, it must be assumed that when such a suit is brought the defendant transferee is in possession. Therefore, the transfer which he has taken must have been one which placed him in possession and consequently where the transferor is a mortgagee he must have been in possession of the mortgaged property at the time he made the transfer. It is not, however, necessary that the possession which the transferor had at the time of the transfer must have been acquired under the mortgage originally made in his favour. Even if the mortgage was a simple mortgage and the mortgagee subsequently gets possession of the mortgaged property otherwise, as for example, by purchase in execution of a simple money-decree obtained against the mortgagor by another creditor, the Article will still apply if it is established that at the time the transfer is made the mortgagee was in possession, no matter under what title. The Article is designed for the protection of a transferee who has been led by a mortgagee to believe that he is acquiring not merely mortgagee rights but a full proprietary title.

No act of a life-tenant can be binding upon the remainderman who does not claim under the life-tenant but under an independent title.

Per Kanhaiya Lal, J.—Under Art 140 of Sch. I, to the Limitation Act, a remainderman or devisee can sue for possession of immoveable property devised to him within twelve years from the date when his estate falls into possession.

Once a person enters into possession of property as a tenant for life he cannot hold adversely to the remainderman. Similarly adverse possession for any length of time against a tenant for life is ineffectual against the reversioner or remainderman whose right to possession only accrues on the death of the tenant for life.

Article 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act allows only a period of 12 years for a suit to recover possession of immoveable property mortgaged and subsequently transferred by the mortgagee for a valuable consideration, to be computed from the date of such transfer. It applies to cases where the mortgagee purports to transfer what he is not competent to alienate, that is an interest greater than that of a mortgagee, and it presupposes a mortgage with possession or followed by possession as a necessary incident or ingredient of it because a mortgagee who is not in possession cannot transfer possession to another or give what he does not possess. If the mortgagee acquires possession in some other capacity, the transfer of possession will be deemed to have been made in the capacity in which it was (rightly or wrongly) acquired and such acquisition cannot be attributed to the mortgage, where the mortgage itself is a simple mortgage or a mortgage not entitling the mortgagee to possession by virtue of its incidents or terms.

The object of Art 134 is to protect transferees for value who have purchased an interest larger than that possessed by the transferor and have been allowed to remain in possession and enjoyment of such larger interest for a period of more than 12 years. In the matter of mortgaged properties so transferred, it controls Art. 148 in the same way as it controls Art 140. If the mortgaged property is in the possession, not of the mortgagee, but in that of a transferee from him who claims to have purchased a larger interest therein for consideration, then neither Art 148 nor Art 140 of Sch I to the Limitation Act will enable the mortgagor or a reversioner or a remainderman to redeem the property after the possession of the transferee has lasted for more than 12 years. A remainderman who sues for the redemption of a mortgage cannot escape the consequences which Art 134 prescribes. A NAUNihal SINGH v ALICE GEORGINA SKINNER, 23 A L J. 691, A I R 1925 All 707, 47 A 803 63

Sch. I, Art. 135—Mortgage with possession

—Suit by mortgagee to recover possession—Limitation, commencement of—Submersion of land, effect of.

In the case of a mortgage with possession, the mortgagor is liable to deliver possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee on the date of the mortgage, but is not bound to do so until the mortgagee asks for or seeks to enforce his right to possession. If the latter fails to do so, the mortgagor's possession cannot be said to be that of a trespasser or wrong-doer.

The mortgagor's right to possession, however, determines on the date of the mortgage, and under Art 135 of Sch I to the Limitation Act, a suit by the mortgagee to recover possession of the mortgaged property must be brought within twelve years of such date. Where, after such date the land mortgaged becomes submersed and is taken possession of by the mortgagor on its re-appearance, the mortgagor will be deemed to have remained in constructive possession thereof during the period of submersion and time will be deemed to have continued to run against the mortgagee during the period of submersion. In any case, time having begun to run against the mortgagee from the date of the mortgage, the subsequent submersion of the land would not have the effect of stopping it. L BARKAT v RELU MAL, 7 L L J 509, A I R. 1925 Lah. 627 178

lease—Forfeiture of lease—Suit for possession—Limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 11, Expl IV—Suit by lessee for renewal—Subsequent suit for possession by lessor—Adverse possession, whether can be pleaded Article 143 of Sch I to the Limitation Act only applies to suits to enforce reliefs claimable by reason of forfeiture or of breach of condition under a contract and can only apply to suits brought against parties who have incurred that forfeiture or committed the breach.

Where, however, a person holding under a lease containing conditions of forfeiture has assigned his right to another person, a suit by the lessor against the assignee for recovery of property by reason of forfeiture or breach of conditions in the lease is not governed by Art. 143. The proper Article applicable is 144 or 142, as the case may be.

Where an assignee from a lessee sues the lessor for renewal of the lease and fails, it is not open to him in a subsequent suit by the lessor to plead title by adverse possession. Such a plea ought to have been set up in the prior suit. M MANAVIKRAMA, ZAMORIN RAJA OF CALICUT v VENKATAGIRI PATTAR, 23 L. W. 58 245

Sch. I, Art. 144—Suit based on title—

Adverse possession, plea of—Burden of proof—Trespassers, independent, whether can tack possession.

One trespasser cannot add to his own possession the previous independent possession of another trespasser. When possession passes from one trespasser to another there is a constructive restoration, even if a momentary restoration, of the true owner to possession.

In a suit falling within Art. 144 of Sch I to the Limitation Act the initial onus is on the plaintiff to establish his title and he is not under an obligation to prove his possession within 12 years of the suit. On the contrary when the plaintiff's title has been proved or is admitted, the burden is on defendant to establish that he or the person through whom he claims has or have been in possession adverse to the plaintiff for over 12 years before the suit. The defendant must also prove when his possession became adverse. O SUKHEO v RAM DULARI, A I R 1926 Oudh 313 825 redeeming entire property—Denial of right to possession unless charge paid—Adverse possession—Limitation

Art. 144—Suit against co-mortgagor

A suit by a co-mortgagor against another co-mortgagor who has redeemed the entire property is governed by Art 144 of Sch I to the Limitation Act and where the latter denies the right of the former to enter into joint possession until he has paid his share of the charge which the latter has defrayed, the possession of the latter is adverse and if it has continued for 12 years the suit is barred by limitation. L NARAIN DAS v SARAJ DIN, A I R 1926 Lah. 238 980

Art. 164—Civil Procedure Code (Act

V of 1908), O V, r 20, O IX, r 13—Ex parte decree, application to set aside—Service of summons—Substituted service—Limitation—Burden of proof.

Article 164 of Sch I to the Limitation Act prescribes a period of thirty days for an application to set aside an ex parte decree, and the terminus a quo is the date of the decree, or, where the summons was not duly served, the date on which the applicant has knowledge of the decree.

In the case of substituted service effected by order of the Court, the summons must be deemed to be duly served for the purpose of Art 164 of Sch I to the Limitation Act, even though it does not in fact come to the defendant's knowledge.

Where the summons is not duly served on the defendant, the terminus a quo for an application to set aside an ex parte decree is the date on which the defendant has knowledge of the decree, and the burden lies upon him to show that his application is within time. L DITTU RAM v. Where the defendant's predecessor-in-title was allowed by the Corporation of Madras to put up a building on the roadside in the City of Madras for the purpose of selling aerated water and ice and leases for terms had been granted and renewed from time to time to defendant's predecessor and then to defendant, and two years before suit, yearly permits had been issued under the Municipal Act to the defendant to keep the ice dépôt.

Held, that the defendant was a tenant within the meaning of s 2, cl (4) of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act and was entitled under s 3, on ejection, to be paid compensation for his building.

When a man has spent a considerable sum of money in erecting a pucca masonry building on another's land, there is a legitimate inference to be drawn that he did so in the hope that he would not be evicted, although it is an inference which may be rebutted by other circumstances, which show that he could not have had such a hope. M KPSAVALU NAICKER v. Madras Civil Rules of Practice, r. 277, object of—Pleader application of, to appear against former client—"Matter connected therewith," meaning of—Wrong order by misinterpretation of rule—Revision.

Order III, r 4, C P C, does not give an absolute right to a Pleader to appear in a Court till the termination of the proceedings, but only provides in what manner a Pleader competent to appear, plead and act should be appointed and till what time the appointment will be in force. If he is not competent to appear, plead and act in any Court under the rules governing the procedure in that Court, he cannot claim right of audience by virtue of O. III, r. 4.

A Pleader can appear for a party whose interest is opposed to that of the party for whom he had acted, drawn up pleadings or appeared in the same proceedings, only with the latter's consent or when specially authorised by the Court.

Rule 277 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice is intended to regulate the proceedings in Courts and a practitioner of the Court has to conform to the rules governing its procedure.

Madras Civil Rules of Practice—consolid.

The object of r. 277 is not to save the Pleader from a suit for damages by the party for whom he acted and against whom he subsequently acted, but to prevent an unreasonable conduct on the part of both the Pleader and the client.

A Pleader who has acted for a party to a suit and has discharged himself cannot afterwards act for the opposite party and the Court has power to restrain him from doing so on an application made for that purpose.

The words "in any matter connected therewith" in r. 277 mean connected with the suit or appeal or other proceeding in which the Pleader gave the advice and does not refer to a subsequent suit, or appeal or proceeding after the termination of the former suit, appeal or proceeding, where the causes of action in the two are different.

The subsequent suit or proceeding or matter can be said to be connected with the previous suit or proceeding or matter only if the former flows from, or in consequence of, the previous suit or proceeding. Otherwise there is no connection at all.

It is not the identity of the subject-matter that establishes the connection between the two suits or the identity of the parties but the identity of the right or title that is asserted or denied and the relief claimed.

Where a Court by a wrong interpretation of r. 277 refuses to allow a practitioner to appear against a client for whom he is alleged to have acted on a former occasion, it exercises a jurisdiction not vested in it by law and the order is revisable by the High Court. M VEERAPPA CHETTIAR v SUNDARESA SASTRIGAL, 49 M L J. 366, 48 M 676, 22 L W 606, A I R 1925 Mad 1201. 300

Under r. 37, Sch. IV to the Madras District Municipalities Act, the Government has the power to control the expenditure of Municipal funds by passing special orders prohibiting certain expenditure and expenditure incurred contrary to such orders is contrary to law and illegal, and a Local Fund Auditor is, therefore, entitled to surcharge the same on the person making, or authorising the making of, such expenditure under r. 60 (1) of Part II, Sch. IV to the Act.

A Municipal Council decided to introduce the national system of education in all institutions under its management but the Government at the same time by order prohibited the use of Municipal funds for the maintenance of any school not recognised by Government. The Municipal Council thereupon resolved not to apply for fresh recognition as to schools controlled by them.

Held, that cheques issued by the Chairman of the Council upon Municipal funds for the purpose of maintaining such schools amounted to the illegal expenditure of Municipal funds, and that the Chairman was, therefore, liable to be surcharged in respect of the amount of cheques so issued by him.

An order of the Government signed by the Secretary to Government, Ministry of Local Self-Government, is none-the-less an order of the Governor-in-Council under r. 37 of Sch. IV to the Madras District Municipalities Act and in any case by virtue of s. 49 of the Government of India Act, an objection to the legality of Government orders on the ground of informality cannot be entertained by Civil Courts.

Sections 22 and 13 of the Madras District Municipalities Act should be read together and subject to the limitation imposed by r. 37, Sch. IV to the Act, and a Municipal Chairman is, therefore, not bound to carry out illegal resolutions of the Council.

The remedy by issue of writ of certiorari is not available in respect of wrong or illegal order of surcharge made under the Madras District Municipalities Act, since a substituted remedy therefor has been provided by r. 62 of Sch. IV to the Act.

Machinery worked by hand such as handlooms or sewing machines is excluded from the scope of s. 249 of the Act.

The consideration that a person is the owner of both the varams is material in determining the applicability of the Madras Estates Land Act, only where the land is a whole inam village and an enfranchised inam.

Where a post settlement inam is a whole village held on a permanent under-tenure, the case falls under s. 2 (3) (e) of the Madras Estates Land Act.

Where in a suit by a tenant claiming to be a ryot under the Madras Estates Land Act to set aside an alleged sale of his holding against an inamdar, the plaintiff and the defendant both in the Trial Court and in the Court of Appeal proceed on the footing that the plaintiff was a ryot and the defendant a landholder, it is not open to the defendant in second appeal to contend that he (the defendant) was a ryot and that the plaintiff was an under-tenant under him and that the Madras Estates Land Act was not applicable as between them. M BHUNJANGA RAO v. Although the grant of a post-settlement inam comprises both the varams, the grantee is a landholder and a ryot under him can, therefore, claim occupancy rights, but where the grant is of the kudivaram alone, the grantee is merely a ryot and his under-tenant cannot claim rights of occupancy.

Where a member of a District Board fails to attend at the meetings of the Board for three consecutive months and is restored to office under s. 56 (4) of the Local Boards Act by a resolution of the Board, he does not become a new member but is merely restored to the office of membership for the balance of the period for which he was originally elected and a fresh oath of allegiance is, therefore, unnecessary.

Where a public body has been created by Statute and that Statute empowers Government to frame rules for its working, it is open to the Government to create a forum for the purpose of deciding disputes as to elections directed to be carried out under the Statute and thereby to exclude the jurisdiction of the Ordinary Civil Courts

Under s. 78 of the Madras Village Courts Act, which empowers the Governor-in-Council to make rules to regulate the appointments or elections of Presidents and other members of the Panchayat Courts, it is a necessary part of this power of regulation that Government should appoint a Tribunal to enquire into and decide objections to such elections.

Under r. 18 of the rules framed by the Madras Government under s. 78 of the Act objections to an election to a village panchayat have to be made within a prescribed time to the Revenue Divisional Officer, whose order, or that of the Collector, thereon is final and not liable to be contested by suit or otherwise.

A Civil Court has, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain a suit challenging the validity of such elections.

—, suit for—Calculation of profits—Burden of proof—Mesne profits, nature of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2

The onus of proving what profits might, with due diligence, have been received in any year lies upon the party claiming mesne profits, but the onus of proving what profits the person in wrongful possession actually received lies upon the person in possession.

The best evidence of the profits derivable from the cultivation of a particular field in any given year is the evidence as to the actual yield in that year minus the cost of cultivation. But such evidence, in order to be useful, must be exact, and it is always open to the party out of possession to falsify the accounts as to the number of measures of grain gathered at the harvest or the price prevailing when they were sold or the cost of cultivation. He may also adduce evidence to prove that the occupant was not diligent and might have got greater profits by proper diligence.

In the absence of evidence as to actual profits, the next best evidence is evidence as to possible profits, of which evidence as to yield of similar adjoining lands in the year in dispute is an example.

The yield of the suit lands in other years is not such a good guide as evidence as the yield of neighbouring lands of similar quality in the year in dispute would be.

Mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case.

Where in a suit for mesne profits, the story of the defendant that he suffered a net loss is incredible or the loss is due to lack of proper diligence, but the plaintiff fails to produce any evidence himself as to the actual profits, or the profits which might have been received by the defendant with due diligence, the suit must be dismissed. M MUHAMMAD ABDUL GAFFUR v. The only onus thrown upon the plaintiff in such a case is to show that there was a mortgage and that it was granted within sixty years of suit. A conveyance of landed property by a husband to his wife in consideration of an extinction of her dower-debt is a gift of the form known as hiba-bil-ewaz in Muhammadan Law, and as such is not liable to pre-emption. It cannot be regarded as a sale attracting the provisions of s 9 of the Oudh Laws Act.

A hiba-bil-ewaz is a well recognised mode of transfer of property in Muhammadan Law. A sale is equally a well-understood form of contract in the same law, yet according to that law the legal incidents of each case differ in many respects.

A hiba-bil-ewaz is a combination of two reciprocal gifts.

The consideration for a transaction of hiba-bil-ewaz in Muhammadan Law does not, therefore, rest merely in the pecuniary value of the subject-matter of the gift and of the return but there is always a personal element when the gift is made in favour of one's wife or other near relations.

It is wholly unsafe to deduce a rule of law that a claim for pre-emption can lie in respect of a transaction of hiba-bil-ewaz if in effect it amounts to a sale, when no such rule was promulgated by the Muhammadan jurists. O BASHIR AHMAD v ZUBIDA KHATUN, 3 O W N 105, A I R 1926 Oudh 186 265

"Waqf," meaning of—Grant in perpetuity—

"Waqf," use of, in deed, effect of

Waqf in its primitive sense means detention; but it implies detention of a thing in the implied ownership of the Almighty God in such a manner that its profits may revert to or be applied for the benefit of mankind, and the appropriation is obligatory so that the thing appropriated or set apart can neither be sold nor given nor inherited. The essential condition is that it should be a settlement in perpetuity or in other words, the ultimate end must be one that cannot fail. The object of a waqf must be charitable, or if the waqf is made for the support of one's descendants, it must include an ultimate dedication for religious, pious or charitable purposes.

The mere use of the word "waqf" in an instrument cannot be separated from the context so as to convert a personal grant to a specified set of individuals into a public disposition.

A deed of grant provided that the grantees and their grand-children, generation after generation, should for ever enjoy the property except in so far that they would have no power to transfer or hypothecate the property or to grant leases thereof for a period exceeding five years.

Held, that the deed provided for a succession of life-estates without any ultimate dedication either to the poor or to any other charitable object recognised by the Muhammadan Law and that, therefore, it did not operate to create a valid waqf. A MUHAMMAD ABZAL v. —Inducement by real borrower.

If a negotiable instrument does not set out clearly that the maker is not personally liable the fact of the knowledge of the payee that the executant did not intend to incur personal liability is irrelevant.

Where, however, the promisee induces the executant of a pro-note to sign the pro-note upon the belief that a third party only, and not he, would be liable thereunder, the executant cannot be held to be personally liable.

ss. 28, 29—Pro-note executed by guardian of minor—Personal liability, whether excluded—Pro-note executed as executor—Liability, extent of—Sections 28 and 29, difference between

On a negotiable instrument only the executant is liable. The question that has in each case to be determined is, on a fair construction, who is the executant of the document? Is the executant in truth the principal although the agent's signature appears on the bill or is the executant the agent although the principal is named? The intention may be inferred from the whole of the instrument.

Under s. 28, Negotiable Instruments Act, an agent signing a pro-note is prima facie liable on the note but he may exclude his liability by indicating on the note that he signs as agent or that he does not intend to incur personal liability. In each case the question is, are the words sufficiently unequivocal to indicate that the agent has not made himself personally liable?

Section 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act in terms applies only to the single case of principals and agents, but the principle of the section is applicable to the cases of guardians and wards.

Where the guardians of a minor who executed a pro-note on behalf of the minor recited in the body of the note that the debt was due by the minor's father and that they were appointed guardians by him but in the operative part they made themselves personally liable.

Held, that their personal liability was not clearly and unequivocally excluded and the executants were personally liable.

The language of s. 29, Negotiable Instruments Act, is widely different from that of s. 28 of the Act. Firstly, under s. 28 it is sufficient to indicate that personal liability is excluded, but under s. 29 there must be express words limiting the liability and secondly, under s. 28 the agent's liability may be altogether excluded whereas under s. 29 the executor's liability can only be limited to the extent of the assets.

The applicability of s. 29, Negotiable Instruments Act, does not depend on the question whether the executant is in fact the legal representative of a deceased person. It is enough if the note purports to have been executed by the executant in his capacity as legal representative, such as that of an executor of the estate of a deceased person.

A person who executes a pro-note as executor appointed under a Will, is personally liable thereunder, unless he expressly limits his liability to the extent of the assets received by him as such. M KOYALAMUDI SUBBANNA v. KODURI SUBBARAYUDU, 50 M. L. J. 125, A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 390 805

A reference to arbitration for partition of property amounts to letting in of all parties to joint possession of the property to be partitioned.

A pleading in a reference to arbitration for partition that a certain part of the property must, because of a previous decision or for any other reason, be allotted to one share or the other, or must be left out of consideration in the division, can scarcely be called a withdrawal of that part of the property from the scope of the arbitration. At the most, it is an attempt to withdraw that property from the scope of the arbitration, that is to say, an admission that it is included in it. N SHEOSAHAI v. RAMKRISHNA, A. I. exactly the same as a partition of property. But a partition may be either partial or complete and it may be either temporary or permanent. In the great majority of partitions of common property, the partition is meant to be permanent. Therefore, if nothing more is known about a partition except that it has been made, it must be taken to be a permanent partition unless there is evidence to show that it was temporary. The length of time for which a partition has been allowed to stand undisturbed or without re-adjustment is a factor which may be taken into consideration in deciding whether a partition was temporary or permanent. N KESHEORAO v. Ordinarily in partition suits it is the practice to declare the shares of all the parties to the suit and to give a decree accordingly. It is not, however, incumbent upon the Court in all circumstances to give a decree in favour of all the co-sharers in a partition suit.

In such a case where it is found that the balance of the cash capital of the partnership is not sufficient to satisfy the claims of the remaining partners with regard to the contributions made by them towards capital, the proper procedure is to appoint a Receiver of partnership assets, to direct him to proceed with the collections of the outstanding debts of the partnership and to declare that such receipts should be employed first towards the discharge of all outside liabilities, costs and expenses and then towards the satisfaction of the respective claims on capital account of the partners. It is not proper in such a case to credit the partner who has appropriated the partnership moneys with the receipt of such moneys and to require other partners to accept book-debts due to the partnership in lieu of their claims on the capital account. P. Utility and novelty, meaning of—Patent for making in one piece.

In Patent Law, the term 'utility' is not used in the abstract but in a very special sense. It may be described as an invention better than the preceding knowledge of the trade as to a particular article. Mere usefulness is not sufficient to support a patent.

For purposes of novelty in Patent Law, it is not enough that the purpose is new or that there is novelty in the application so that the article produced is in that sense new, but there must be some novelty in the mode of application. In adopting the old contrivance to the new purpose, there must be difficulties to overcome requiring what is called invention or there must be some ingenuity in the mode of making the adoption. To be new the novelty must show invention.

Patents for making in one piece, articles previously made in two or more pieces have generally been held invalid. C INDIAN VACUUM BRAKE CO. LTD v E. S. C. LUARD, 42 C. L. J. 543, A. I. R. 1926 Cal 152, 53 C. 308 1008

The ingredients of the offence of conspiracy are:—

(1) That there should be an agreement between the persons who are alleged to conspire; and

(2) that the agreement should be:—

(i) for doing of an illegal act, or

(ii) for doing by illegal means an act which may not itself be illegal.

Conspiracy is a substantive offence and has nothing to do with abetment. Although an overt act may be specified in the charge yet this is not (except when the end of the conspiracy is not to commit an offence) necessary. The overt act or acts is or are introduced not as partially constituting an offence but as giving information and example as to what the conspiracy was. The offence is conspiracy. Nor is there any limit to the number of overt acts which can be given in the charge.

Penal Code—contd.

It is not necessary that each conspirator should be aware of all the acts done by each of the conspirators in the course of the conspiracy.

It is, however, necessary that there should be one conspiracy and not a series of conspiracies and criminal acts unconnected by unity of intention. S CHANDIRAM v. EMPEROR, 27 Cr. L. J. 286, A. I. R. 1926 Sind 174 462

— ss. 120B, 420—Conspiracy, charge of, essential requisites of—Nature of proof—"Where an express provision has been made in the Code for the punishment of such conspiracy," meaning of.

A charge of conspiracy in respect of but one agreement between several accused persons to cheat such members of the public as they could defraud by deceitful means is not a bad charge.

It is immaterial if all the accused had concocted the scheme of the conspiracy or that all of them should have originated it. It is sufficient if it originated with some of them and the others had subsequently joined the original conspirators.

The conspiracy may be proved either by direct evidence or by proof of circumstances from which the Court may presume the conspiracy.

The words "where an express provision has been made in the Code for the punishment of such a conspiracy" appearing in s. 120-B of the Penal Code do not mean that where there is proof of an abetment of an offence, the charge should be for such abetment. It is optional for the Crown to proceed for abetment of an offence committed in pursuance of the conspiracy or of the offence of conspiracy.

The inclusion in a charge of conspiracy to cheat of certain specific offences relied on by the prosecution in proof of the substantive offence of cheating does not render the charge illegal as being in respect of different offences specified therein. S KISHANCHAND v. A large crowd of men assembled at a village and agreed among themselves to proceed in a body to a certain Police Station, there to threaten and to obstruct the Sub-Inspector of Police and the Policemen with him in the discharge of their duty and then to proceed to a certain bazaar and stop the sale of intoxicants, meat, fish, etc. It was also agreed that if the Sub-Inspector of Police did not act in a certain manner and offered resistance, he and the Policemen with him would be assaulted. The crowd then proceeded towards the Police Station and on arrival there started an altercation with the Sub-Inspector of Police. Their behaviour and attitude was such that if they had been called upon to disperse they would not have done so. During the course of the altercation the members of the crowd began to throw stones at the Police. The Police then fired, killing two men and wounding several others. The mob inflamed to fury then murdered the Police Inspector and several other Police and chaukidars. Some of the members of the crowd were charged with offences under ss. 120-B and 302 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code and were convicted of the latter offence at one trial:

Held, (1) that the immediate object of the crowd as it reached the Police Station being to threaten and to obstruct the Police in the discharge of their duty, it was an object to commit an offence punishable under s. 152 of the Penal Code which was in itself sufficient to bring the matter within the purview of the third clause of s. 141 of the Code and that consequently the crowd formed an unlawful assembly when they started from the village;

(2) that the agreement arrived at between the members of the crowd to stop the sale of intoxicants, meat, fish, etc., in the bazaar, under the circumstances, was an agreement to commit an offence under s. 506 of the Penal Code and that for this reason also the crowd was an unlawful assembly within the meaning of s. 141 of the Code;

(3) that as soon as stones began to be thrown at the Police by the members of the crowd at the Police Station, the members of the unlawful assembly became guilty of rioting and that in view of what happened subsequently the charge under s. 302 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code was fully established as against every one of the accused persons who was proved by evidence to have continued an active participant in the rioting after the moment when stones began to be thrown, unless it could be inferred from credible evidence that a particular accused person had separated himself from the rest before the offence of murder had been committed by any of them;

(4) that having regard to the fact that the majority of the accused were ignorant peasants who had been drawn into the affair by misrepresentation of facts and preposterous promises concerning the millennium of Swaraj, the arrival of which was to be forwarded by courage and resolution on their part, those of them against whom specific acts such as would have resulted in their conviction on a charge of murder apart from the special provisions of s. 149 of the Penal Code, were not proved, did not deserve the extreme penalty of death and should be sentenced to transportation for life only;

(5) that the charge against the accused being that the events which occurred at the Police Station followed upon the alleged criminal conspiracy arrived at between the accused at the village and were so connected therewith, not merely by sequence of time but by the link of causation, as to make the conspiracy at the village and the subsequent assault on the Policemen at the Police Station parts of the same transaction, within the meaning of that expression in s. 239 of the O. P. C., the joint trial of the accused was perfectly justified;

(6) that in order to decide whether the joint trial of the accused was or was not legal the Judge had to look to the case for the prosecution as set forth in the charges themselves and that it was not necessary for him to consider what the position would be if he eventually came to the conclusion either that no offence punishable under s. 120-B was committed by any of the accused or that if any offence was so committed it was one excluded from his cognizance by s. 196-A of the O. P. C.

Whatever may be said in defence of peaceful picketing when undertaken in the market of a large town by individuals or by small groups of earnest and enthusiastic men or women, has no application whatever to the flooding of a small bazaar by a body of men whose mere presence there would put a stop to all business which could only be carried on with their consent and with their active assistance.

In every case of a conviction on a charge of murder the law regards the sentence of death as the normal and the appropriate sentence. Where the Court sees fit to pass the lesser sentence of transportation for life it must record its reasons for so doing. A. ABDULLAH v. EMPEROR, A. I. R. 1924 All. 233, 27 Cr. L. J. 193.

— ss. 141, 143—Unlawful assembly, what is—Common object—Meeting for deliberation

An assembly cannot be an unlawful assembly within the meaning of s. 141 of the Penal Code unless the common object of the persons composing the assembly falls within one of the five classes described in that section.

For the purposes of s. 141 of the Penal Code the "common object" must denote a common object then and there as an assembly to take action, and it cannot be held that there was such a common object because the members of the assembly agreed at some uncertain future date to take individual action.

Where the members of an assembly merely agree as to what they should individually do, when, in the case of each person separately, a demand is made for the payment of a certain tax, the assembly does not come within the definition of an unlawful assembly as laid down in s. 141 of the Penal Code. *R. — ss. 147, 149, 323—Unlawful assembly—Injuries inflicted by members—Rioting—Hurt—Convictions for separate offences, legality of Section 149 of the Penal Code creates no substantive offence in itself. It is merely declaratory of the law and makes a person who has been a member of an unlawful assembly liable for the offences committed by any other member of it. But s. 147 of the Code creates a substantive offence in itself and makes a person guilty of the offence of rioting as distinct from actually causing any injury or hurt. Similarly s. 323 of the Code creates a distinct offence in itself. Where, therefore, more injuries than one are caused by the members of an unlawful assembly they can be convicted of offences both under s. 147 and under s. 323, read with s. 149 of the Penal Code. In such a case, as soon as the first injury is caused to any person, force is used and the offence of rioting is complete. Subsequent injuries though inflicted in pursuance of the same common object would be distinct injuries justifying a conviction under s. 323. A. CHHIDDA v. EMPEROR, 24 A. L. J. 178, 27 Cr. L. In a prosecution under ss. 304-A, 337 and 338 of the Penal Code the accused cannot claim the benefit of an error of judgment when he has exercised no judgment at all.

The expression "gross neglect" finds no place in the Criminal Law of India. That law does not render a mere casual inadvertence of duty criminal, but such neglect of duty as either directly results in loss of life or injury to person or such neglect as endangers life or property.

Where a person is charged with the offence of causing loss of life by a negligent omission, it is not open to him to rely on the plea of contributory negligence which is distinctly recognized in the Law of Torts but finds no place in an indictment for criminal negligence. In such a case the question is what was the proximate cause of the accident.

The arena of facts covered by the expression "same transaction" used in s. 235 of the Cr. P. C. varies with the circumstances of each case. The real and substantial test for determining whether several offences are so connected together as to form one transaction depends upon whether they are so related together in point of purpose or as cause and effect or as principal or subsidiary acts as to constitute one continuous action.

It was the duty of the accused to make a periodical inspection of certain boilers in order to see that the boilers were in a fit condition to be worked. One of the boilers exploded and caused loss of life and injury to person, the accident being due to the fact that the crown stays of the boiler were badly corroded, some of them having disappeared altogether. If the accused had carried out his duty of inspecting the boiler from time to time, all possibility of the accident would have been avoided. During a departmental enquiry into the cause of the accident, the accused produced a Dak Despatch Book in order to prove that he had submitted periodical reports of his inspection of the boiler to his superior officer. He also relied on certain entries made by him in a private book to show that he had reported on the condition of the crown stays. The entries in the Dak Despatch Book and the private book produced by the accused were suspected to be forged and the accused was put on his trial on three different charges, (1) under ss 304-A, 337 and 338 for neglect of duty resulting in the bursting of the boiler and causing loss of life and injury to person, (2) under ss 465, 471 or in the alternative under s 193 of the Penal Code for having forged entries in his private book with the object of inducing the officer who was holding an enquiry to form an erroneous opinion and (3) under s 477-A of the Penal Code for falsifying Dak Despatch Book. He was convicted under the first and second heads but was acquitted on the third.

Held, (1) that the neglect of the accused resulting in the bursting of the boiler and the subsequent forgeries with the object of screening himself from criminal liability and in order that he might be retained in his employment were part of the same transaction within the meaning of s 235 of the Cr P C, and that there was consequently no misjoinder of charges.

(2) that the bursting of the boiler being due to the neglect of duty of the accused and that the accused having forged the entries in the private book with the object of being retained in employment, his conviction on the first and second charges was justified. S WOODWARD v. — s. 403—Criminal misappropriation—Reputation of trust—Sapurdar of attached property—Failure to deliver property—Covenant for delivery of price—Civil liability

Section 403, Penal Code, is in no way restricted to appropriating property to one's own use. If a trustee repudiates the trust and asserts that he now holds the property on behalf of a person other than the one who entrusted him with it, he has misappropriated the property just as much he would have been said to misappropriate it if he had been putting forward his own claim to it.

When a Receiver attaches property and entrusts it to some person, he does not purport to sell it to him or dispose of it at that time. The Receiver may not even be in a position to know its true value. The intention of the parties is that the articles should be returned in specie or produced at the time when the auction sale is to take place. The covenant in the sapurdnama, that the person entrusted with the property would be liable to pay a certain amount in case he fails to deliver the property, is more by way of security than because the property is transferred to him with liberty to dispose of it or withhold it. In such cases it is the true intention of the parties which must be taken into account. Therefore, if the property is not produced the sapurdar is guilty of criminal misappropriation. It is not a case of mere civil liability.

The mere fact that there is a civil liability does not necessarily absolve one from criminal liability. A INDAR SINGH v. EMPEROR, 27 Cr. L. J. 297, 21 A. L. J. 270, A. I. R. 1926 All 392, 43 A. 283 585

There is a distinction between criminal and civil liability for defamation. Civil liability is to be determined by the principles of English Law, but criminal liability is governed by the provisions of the Penal Code and those provisions alone.

A finding that a defamatory statement was made in good faith within s. 499, Penal Code, cannot be read into a general statement by the Sessions Judge, that the statement was covered by privilege, and that it was made not with the intention of doing harm to the person defamed but with the object of saving the person making it.

The immunity conferred by s. 342 (2), Cr P. C., does not extend to a written statement by the accused. A CHANPA DEVI v. PIRBHU LAL, 27 Cr. L. J. 253; 24 A. L. J. 329; A. I. R. 1926 All. 287. 429

Penal Code—contd.

— ss. 499, Except. 9, 500—Defamation—Statement made by Advocate, whether privileged—Absolute privilege, doctrine of, whether applicable—Malice, proof of—Advocate, position and duties of.

Section 499 of the Penal Code is meant to be universal and the English Law of absolute privilege does not apply in this country to statements of Advocates in judicial proceedings.

It is, however, for the public good that a person charged with the responsibility of an Advocate should, so far as may be, feel unfettered by any control other than that of the Presiding Judge, in the use of every weapon placed at his disposal by the law for the defence of the liberty of his client.

Exception 9 to s. 499 of the Penal Code must, therefore, be interpreted accordingly, and it is the duty of a Court when a complaint is made against an Advocate or Legal Practitioner for defamation that it should presume that the remark was made on instructions and in good faith; and unless circumstances clearly show that it was made wantonly, or from malicious or private motives, the complaint should not be entertained.

Even if the circumstances suggest recklessness or malice, further enquiry should be made and an opportunity, if possible, should be given to a Legal Practitioner to offer an explanation before summons is issued against him.

Per Brown, J—A definite pronouncement of the Indian Legislature is not liable to be overridden by the provisions of the Common Law of England.

The law as to absolute privilege is not applicable to the Criminal Law of defamation in India. The Indian Penal Code is a complete Code in itself. It is to a large extent founded on the Common Law of England, but the ordinary criminal offences in this country are punishable, not because they would be offences under the English Common Law, but because they have been declared to be offences punishable under the Penal Code. Section 499 defines the criminal offence of defamation. The section is quite clearly wide enough in certain circumstances to make statements made by Advocates in the exercise of their profession amounting to criminal defamation punishable under s. 500. There are a number of exceptions set forth in s. 499, and any statement falling within those exceptions does not amount to criminal defamation. But any statement which does not fall within any of these exceptions, and which otherwise satisfies the terms of the general definition in the section is quite clearly declared by s. 499 read with s. 500 to be punishable.

If an Advocate is to carry out his duties to his client, he must frequently have to make imputations or statements, the correctness of which he has not had the time or opportunity to verify, and it is a very fair presumption in ordinary cases that a statement or imputation so made by an Advocate in the course of judicial proceedings is made, not for the purposes of defamation, but in good faith, for the protection of the interests of his client. In such a case, therefore, to establish an offence of criminal defamation it is necessary not only to show that a defamatory statement has been made, but that it has been made maliciously, wantonly, or with some improper motive. A Magistrate should refuse to take cognizance of a complaint in such a case unless there is some allegation of malice; wantonness or improper motive. R McDONNELL v. EMPEROR, A. I. Vendor, title of, assertion of—Vendor not in possession at time of sale—Sale, what amounts to—Conveyance in consideration of price and promise to do certain things, whether sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54.

In order to succeed in a suit for pre-emption, the pre-emptor must assert title in the vendor, and the fact that there was a conveyance by the vendor to the vendee which amounted to a sale. The vendee qua vendee and as against the pre-emptor is estopped from denying the title of his vendor, and so, for the purposes of a pre-emption suit, the title must be assumed to exist in the vendor, if it is alleged by the pre-emptor to exist.

The deed of conveyance, however, must clearly profess to sell the property, and not merely be a promise to sell the property in the future. It makes no difference whether the vendor was out of possession or in possession at the date of the sale, nor does it make any difference whether there was a small or large chance of his getting his title acknowledged in Court.

In order, however, that a transaction should amount to a sale it is necessary that there should be a price paid or promised or part paid and part promised, which means that the price must be stated in or ascertainable at the time of the deed.

A conveyance in consideration of a price and also a promise to do certain things, the doing of which will cost an indefinite sum of money, is not a sale. O. RAM PHER SINGH v. SHEO SARAN SINGH, 3 O. W. N. 138; A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 196 757

Wajib-ul-arz embodying custom—Partition of village—Agreement to observe custom irrespective of partition—Agreement, whether binding—Fresh wajib-ul-arz, whether necessary.

Ordinarily where a partition of a village has taken place, the joint ownership is destroyed, and each mahal becomes a separate unit for the purpose of regulating the rights of the co-sharers forming the proprietary body of that mahal inter se.

Where, however, the wajib-ul-arz relating to the village recognises the existence of a custom of pre-emption amongst the co-sharers of the village, and when the village is divided by partition into different mahals, the co-sharers agree to the partition subject to the reservation that the custom will continue in force irrespective of that partition, and that a co-sharer of one mahal would be entitled to pre-empt in respect of property situated in another mahal, the reservation operates as a condition precedent to the partition and is as much binding on the co-sharers, who are parties to the partition proceeding, as the partition itself. It is not necessary that a fresh wajib-ul-arz should be prepared at the time of partition in respect of each mahal embodying such a custom. A. SRI KISHEN v. An agent who was carrying on money-lending business on behalf of his principal was charged by the latter with breach of trust in obtaining an inadequate security from a third person in discharge of a pro-note that had been executed by a solvent debtor. The agent then produced a fresh pro-note alleged to have been since executed by the said debtor. A suit by the principal on this pro-note was dismissed on the ground that the note was forged. The cause of action on the original claim had by then become barred by time. In a suit by the principal against the agent for damages caused by his misconduct in forging the note and misleading the plaintiff into giving up the claim on the original note, it was found that the note was illegal and void being in contravention of s. 26 of the Paper Currency Act.

Held, that the plaintiff had no cause of action on which to maintain the suit, since even if the note had been genuine, a suit on that document must have failed and it could not be said that the loss of the litigation was due to the action of the agent in forging the note, the loss, if any, being due to the plaintiff's own neglect in not seeing what his rights were under the document. M VEERASWAMI PILLAI v. Privy Council—conclld.

Criminal Courts of the various dominions of His Majesty will not act as a Court of Criminal Appeal and will not review or interfere with the course of criminal proceedings unless it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done.

It is in the power of the Governor-General of India, if he thinks that in the state of public feeling a fair trial cannot be obtained in the place where an offence would ordinarily be tried, to order that the trial be held elsewhere.

Where, however, the Governor-General refuses to make such an order, the refusal cannot be held to amount to a violation of the principles of natural justice so as to enable their Lordships of the Privy Council to interfere with the result of the trial.

Questions as to the sufficiency of evidence or the adequacy of the Judge's charge to the Jury cannot come within the ambit of the rule laid down as to the disregard of the forms of legal process or violation of the principles of natural justice. P. In a suit on a promissory-note plaintiff stated that cash consideration had passed at the time of the execution of the promissory note. The defendant's plea was that the pro note was executed as a sort of security for his good conduct in connection with a partnership which was being carried on between him and the plaintiff's brother. The Trial Court found that no cash consideration had passed and that the story of the defendant was true, the pro-note having been executed as security for accounting for sums drawn by the defendant as a partner.

Held, that on the finding of the Trial Court the suit was bound to be dismissed and that that finding could not be construed as declaring the contingent liability of the defendant at the time of the settlement of accounts. M APPAJEE PILLAI v. MANIKA MUDALI, 21 L. W. 652 30

Where an order of adjudication did not fix a period within which the insolvent was to apply for his discharge but an addition was subsequently made to the order behind the back of the parties fixing such period.

Held, (1) that the subsequent addition could not be treated as a part of the order of adjudication and was, therefore, inoperative,

(2) that no time having been fixed in the order of adjudication within which the insolvent was to apply for his discharge, s. 43 of the Provincial Insolvency Act had no application to the case, and the order of adjudication could not, therefore, be annulled for failure of the insolvent to apply for his discharge within the period specified in the subsequent addition to the order of adjudication;

In such a case the Official Receiver has only to make out the intention of the insolvent. The intention or motive of the creditor is immaterial. — ss. 53, 54, difference between—Encumbrance created within two years of adjudication—Consideration—Good faith—Burden of proof.

Where an incumbrance created by an insolvent within two years of his adjudication is challenged in the Insolvency Court the onus lies on the incumbrancer to prove both good faith and valuable consideration.

There is a radical difference between s. 53 and s. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Under s. 54 the Court is not concerned with the motive of the transferee but only with that of the debtor. It is he who is said to have given the preference and whether the transferee acted in good faith or not is immaterial. Where, however, the three months' limitation contemplated by s. 54 has expired, it is open to the transferee to prove that whatever the motive of the transferor may have been, he on his part acted in good faith. And where the consideration of the transfer is a past debt the transferee stands in a better position than otherwise. He has his own interests to serve and owes no duty to the other creditors to protect their interests. He is in the absence of any statutory limitation imposed by the Law of Bankruptcy, as much at liberty to secure the payment of his debt by superior diligence as by accepting a voluntary preference provided he goes no further than what is necessary to serve his own purpose. *S OFFICIAL RECEIVER v. — s. 54—Preference of one creditor over others—Mortgage securing old and new loans.

A transfer cannot be avoided merely because its effect is to give one creditor preference over other creditors unless the debtor intends to do so.

Where a debtor who is unable to meet his liabilities and stands in need of further accommodation, approaches one of his creditors for a further loan, and executes a mortgage securing both the fresh and the previous loans, it cannot be said that he intended to prefer that creditor over others, but merely that he wanted to benefit himself. *L MOTI MAL-RAM SARUP v. — ss. 56, 4—Official Receiver, powers of—Stranger in possession of property—Insolvent not entitled to present possession—Power of Court to dispossess—Remedy—Question of title, decision of—Procedure.

The position of the Official Receiver under the Provincial Insolvency Act is the same as that of a Receiver appointed under O. XL, C. P. C.

The Insolvency Court, therefore, cannot, acting under s. 56 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, direct any person to deliver up property in his possession to the Official Receiver unless the insolvent is entitled on the date of such application to the present possession of such property. If a title is set up by the person in possession, it is open to the Court on a proper application being made under s. 4 of the Act to try the issue whether the insolvent is entitled to the property or not.

Provincial Insolvency Act—1920—concl'd.

Where an order is passed under s. 56 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act it does not determine the rights of the parties and though the Judge may incidentally determine the question, yet it cannot be said that the question is finally determined.

No body other than the Official Receiver can move under s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act unless the Official Receiver is unwilling to act and the Court authorises a creditor or any other person interested in preserving the insolvent's estate to act under that section in the name of the Official Receiver.

The power given to an Insolvency Court by s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is subject to the provisions of the Act, one of which is the proviso to s. 56 (3) which is in the way of the Court removing any person from the possession of property whom the insolvent has no present right to remove. *M CHITTAMMAL v. Under this section the duty of the High Court is to see whether the particular decree or order complained of is according to law.

A Small Cause Court fails to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it in returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court on the ground that the plaintiff's success or failure in the suit depended upon a question of proof or disproof of title to immoveable property, where the question of title does not really arise. *N CHANDRABHAGA BAI v. An agreement by a person to pay a certain quantity of grain every year to the cultivator of a field, on account of the damage to be sustained by him owing to the cattle of the former passing over a strip of land in his field, is not a license but a lease, as it creates a right in such person, which could be exercised by his transferees or his servants and could not be revoked by the grantor.

Section 6 of the Punjab Limitation (Custom) Act of 1920 really gives an additional period of one year to those who were at the time of the enforcement of the Act entitled to institute suits, but could be successfully met by a plea of limitation owing to the repeal of the Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act of 1900, and the consequent reduction of the limitation by the new Act. The section, however, does not control the operation of s. 5 of the Act.

A father governed by Punjab Custom, having a minor son, sold certain ancestral property on 1st April 1913. The son attained his majority on 3rd July 1921. In a suit by the son instituted on 23rd May 1923, for a declaration that the sale being without necessity would not affect his reversionary rights it was objected that the limitation of 12 years prescribed for the suit by Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act of 1900 having been reduced to six years under Punjab Limitation (Custom) Act of 1920, the suit was governed by s. 6 of the Act, and not having been brought within one year of the operation of the said Act was barred by limitation.

The vendee whose house was also contiguous to the house in suit, denied that the plaintiff had a superior right and pleaded that he had a right of way through the compound of the house in suit. It was found that the vendee was not a joint owner of the compound in which the plaintiff's house and the house in suit were situated, and that he had no right of way over the compound as his use of it had only been permissive. The lower Appellate Court, however, dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the defendant's house as well as the plaintiff's had a common entrance with the house in suit from the street and that, therefore, they had equal rights of pre-emption.

Held, (1) that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in dismissing the plaintiff's suit on a ground which had not been raised by the defendant in his pleadings,

(3) (g), (i)—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 18—Landlord and tenant—Dispossession of tenant by landlord—Suit by tenant to recover possession—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Fraud—Extension of limitation

Sub-clauses (g) and (i) of s. 77 (3) of the Punjab Tenancy Act cover all conceivable causes of litigation between a landlord and his tenant qua tenant, and an ex-tenant in that capacity, can look for no relief outside the Revenue Courts.

If a tenant, who has been wrongfully dispossessed of his tenancy in the circumstances mentioned in s. 50 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, allows the period of one year prescribed by that section to expire without bringing a suit in the Revenue Court, he loses his remedy altogether, and by the combined operation of ss. 50 and 77 (3) (g) is debarred from bringing a suit for recovery of possession or for compensation or for both in a Civil Court.

In a suit by a tenant to recover possession of his holding from which he has been dispossessed by the landlord, it is not any alleged fraud by which dispossession was carried out by the landlord which is pertinent for the purposes of s. 18 of the Limitation Act, but the fraud by which the plaintiff has been kept from the knowledge of his right to institute a suit. L. In a suit to recover compensation from a Railway Company for the non-delivery of articles of special value, consigned to the Company for carriage the latter can claim protection under s. 75 of the Railways Act only if it is proved that the articles have been lost. If the articles are still in the possession of the Railway Administration and it fails to deliver the articles, it cannot take advantage of the provisions of s. 75.

Where, however, the suit is brought not against the Railway to which the goods were delivered, but against a Railway over whose system they had subsequently to be carried, the suit is maintainable, under s. 80 of the Railways Act, only on the assumption that the goods have been lost while in the custody of such Railway, and the latter is, therefore, entitled to claim the protection of s. 75 of the Act, without any further proof of the loss of the goods.

When goods delivered to a Railway Company for carriage are not forthcoming for delivery at the destination and their whereabouts are not known, it must be assumed that they have been lost. A. CHANDRABHAN PRAKASHNATH v. E. I. RY. CO., 24 A. L. J. 305, A. I. R. 1926 All. 299 622

The mere fact that the Agent of a Railway Company constitutes a department for the registering and investigation of claims, and that a claim is preferred to that department, does not absolve the person making the claim, if he intends to sue the Railway Company, from giving notice to the Company as prescribed by s. 77 read with s. 140 of the Railways Act.

When a person claiming against a Railway Company must be presumed to know that he must do a certain act in a certain way within a fixed time, without which preparatory step a suit will not be competent, he is not prevented from taking that step because he has been told that his claim is receiving attention and no further answer is received before the expiry of the period of limitation. Where a registered sale-deed is followed by an agreement to re-convey, and the latter can be treated as an altogether separate transaction from the sale-deed itself, then under s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, the agreement vests no interest in the property in favour of the vendor and does not require to be registered. But if the agreement to re-convey is really a part and parcel of the transaction of sale, which is only partly evidenced by the registered deed of sale, then the agreement to re-convey must also be registered. In other words, when a transaction is evidenced by a document which is in effect divided into two parts, one of which is registered and the other is not, then the law looks to what is the real transaction between the parties, and demands that the whole document evidencing that transaction must be registered, whether it consists of one part or two.

Per Coyajee, J.—The question whether an agreement to re-convey immoveable property exceeding Rs. 99 in value does or does not require to be registered must, in each case, be decided on a consideration of the contents of the document itself and of such facts as might be proved for the purpose of showing in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts. Proximity of time, or even the identity of the dates of the two documents, is not the decisive circumstance in all cases. B. GAJANAN NARAYAN PATKAR v. JIVANGIRI CHAMELOIRI, 27 Bom. L. R. 1465; A. Where a vendor in order to enable himself to register a sale-deed relating to certain property in the office of a particular Sub-Registrar obtains a conveyance in his own name of certain property situated within the jurisdiction of that Sub-Registrar and then includes it in the sale-deed executed by him, the registration of the sale-deed by that particular Sub-Registrar, in the absence of any intention to defraud, is perfectly valid. PAT JASODA KOBR v. Religious endowment—Person not entitled to benefit permitted to share—Trustees, duty of—Zoroastrian Temple at Rangoon—Non-Parsi Zoroastrian, whether entitled to benefit—Injunction

The Zoroastrian religion not only permits but enjoins the conversion to that religion of persons born in other religions and of non-Zoroastrian parents. In spite of such permission, however, the Zoroastrians, ever since their advent into India, have never attempted to convert anyone into their religion.

The benefits of the Zoroastrian Temple at Rangoon are confined to persons who possess the double qualification of being Zoroastrians and racial Parsis, and Zoroastrians, who are not racial Parsis, have no right of entering into the Temple and may, therefore, be excluded or extruded from the Temple by the Trustees.

But it does not follow that the trustees are bound to exclude such non-Parsi Zoroastrians from the Temple. Still less does it follow that in an action to which the trustees are not parties, and in which, therefore, no indirect remedy can be claimed, a direct claim by the Parsi Zoroastrians can be supported against a non-Parsi Zoroastrian who worships in the temple, as if for a tort committed by such person.

For a trespass upon temple land, the only person who can bring an action for injunction is the person in possession of the land, that is, the trustee. It may be that in India it may be convenient to allow such a suit by certain worshippers against others. But if so, it must, at any rate, be established that the juxtaposition of the two sets of persons is so repugnant to their habits of mind that the entrance of one set into the Temple entails the departure of the other, so that it is, as it were, trespass to the person.

When property is set apart for public or charitable uses, it will be a malversation to apply any of the funds for persons who are not objects of the trust. Those who are objects of the trust must have all the benefits they require; and if there is a surplus, it must be left to the Courts to make a cyprus application of it. But when the subject-matter of such a trust or charity is the rendering of some convenience or service of such a nature that it will not hurt the lawful recipients if others share with them, the trustees are not bound to exclude persons who have no legal title to share. They may do so, they may treat all such persons as trespassers and say Sic volo sic jubeo, set pro ratione voluntas. But if they choose to admit to the benefit of some park or garden established for a particular district some persons from over the border or to admit to a public library destined for a particular Municipality persons from outside, or admit to the hearing of a lecture by a University Professor persons not members of the University, this of itself furnishes no ground of complaint. If the numbers admitted are too large or the persons are disorderly or unpleasant in their habits or in any way substantially interfere with the convenience or benefit of those for whom the endowment was created, the trustees may be required to exclude them. But the mere claim of A that B shall not share in such a benefit because B is not within the terms of the foundation is not one that Courts would encourage. P C D R K SAKLAT v BELLA, 23 A L J. 1016, A I R 1925 P C 298, 49 M L J 821; 43 C L J 23, 30 C W. The suit was decreed and the defendants were directed to hold an election after issuing proper notices. An election was accordingly held, but it was set aside on the application of one of the defendants and the suit was dismissed.

—Demands arising out of different transactions, whether can be set off—Plaintiff managing tenancy lands as agent subsequent to period included in rent-decree, effect of.

Plaintiff and defendant were co-tenants of certain occupancy fields. The landlord sued them for arrears of rent in respect of certain years and obtained a decree which the plaintiff paid up. Plaintiff then sued the defendant to recover the latter's share of the decretal amount. The defendant admitted liability in respect of the amount claimed but resisted the claim on the ground that the plaintiff was the manager of the tenancy lands and was liable to account for the profits thereof up to the date of the institution of the suit and could not, therefore, sue to recover what could only be an item of debt against the defendant in the account to be rendered by the plaintiff. It was found that if the plaintiff was managing the tenancy lands as the defendant's agent such management commenced after the expiry of the years in respect of which the rent-decree satisfied by the plaintiff had been obtained by the landlord.

Held, that the defendant could not insist on having a demand not arising out of the agency treated as a debit item in any account that the plaintiff might have to render in respect of his agency, nor could the defendant claim an equitable set-off in respect of such demand, since the demands of the plaintiff and the defendant had not arisen out of the same transaction. N ZUKOBAI v. A executed a sale of certain property in favour of B and put him in possession of it. He further agreed to indemnify him in the event of his losing possession. The vendee lost possession upon a suit having been brought by the relatives of A to set aside the sale. Subsequently the vendee brought a suit to recover the consideration-money and the defendant-vendor claimed equitable set-off in the shape of deduction on account of the profits realised by the vendee during his period of possession.

Held, (1) that the suit was one under Art. 97 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards failed;

(2) that the claim for profits was not a cross-claim arising out of the same transaction such as could be described as a claim to an equitable set-off and, therefore, could not be allowed.

The test of liability of a Hindu son for an illegal act committed by his father would rather be the purpose for which the father's act was committed than the legality of the act itself.

Where a sale made by a Hindu was set aside as being without family necessity and the vendee being deprived of possession sued to recover the purchase-money by proceeding against the family property in the hands of the son of the vendor who had been brought on the record as the legal representative of his father who died during pendency of the suit:

In a suit for specific performance of the agreement by the plaintiffs against the defendants:

Held, (1) that if the agreement was to be treated as a contract it was unenforceable as being without consideration,

(2) that if the agreement amounted to a mere offer, not having been accepted by the persons to whom it was made in their lifetime, it could not be accepted by their successors-in-interest after their death, and was not, therefore, capable of being sued upon. B DUMA TOMA RUMAV v. ss. 27 (c), 18 (b)—Suit for specific performance—Contract to sell—Vendor, impeaching mortgage by predecessor-in-title—Mortgagee, whether proper party

The general rule is that in a suit for the specific performance of a contract to sell, persons who do not claim under the parties to the contract and are strangers to it or persons claiming adversely to both the parties, ought not to be made parties.

A person setting up a mortgage in his favour executed by the predecessor-in-title of a vendor, who impeaches it as being a sham transaction and without consideration, is, however, a person whose title could be displaced by the vendor and against whom, therefore, the contract to sell could under s. 27 (c) of the Specific Relief Act be specifically enforced. In such a case the just and proper course would be to implead also as party to the suit the person who claims to be a mortgagee and to adjudicate on all the questions in the suit itself so as to enable the purchaser to be free from all future risk and liability. M MAYAPPA CHETTIAR v. A mortgagee from a person who has, on the date of mortgage, only a reversionary interest in the property mortgaged, does not, if he is aware of mortgagor's true interest in the property, acquire any right in the property on the death of the life-estate-holder.

It is only when a transferee is led into the belief of absolute title on the part of the transferor and acts on the representation of the transferor, that he is entitled under s 43, Transfer of Property Act, to take advantage of the fact that the transferor later on becomes the owner of the property. If that were not so ss 6 and 43 of the Act would conflict. A MULRAJ v INDAR SINGH, A. I. R. 1926 All. 102, 48 A. 150 471

s. 53—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art 120—Fraudulent alienation—Suit by creditors—Nature of suit—Individual creditors, right of—Limitation—Starting point

A suit under s 53, Transfer of Property Act, to set aside a fraudulent alienation by a debtor is governed by Art. 120 of Sch I to the Limitation Act

The right of suit under s 53, Transfer of Property Act, is an individual right which each creditor has, although if one creditor obtains a decree in a suit under s 53 that decree accrues to the benefit of the other creditors as well

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J—The right to sue under s. 53, Transfer of Property Act, accrues when a creditor exercises his option of avoiding a fraudulent alienation and the starting point of limitation for a suit by him, therefore, is the date when he exercises this option.

Per Madhavan Nair, J—The starting point for limitation for a suit under s 53, Transfer of Property Act, is not the date on which the creditor exercises the option to avoid the transfer, but it is the date on

Where a vendor of immoveable property fails to disclose to the purchaser a defect in the title which the latter could not have himself discovered, or fails to deliver possession of the property sold to the purchaser, the latter is entitled to cancel the sale and to sue to recover the purchase-money paid by him together with the incidental expenses incurred by him. R MAHOMED SIDDIQ v LIKAN SHOO, A I R 1925 Rang 372; 4 Bur L. The provisions of s 95 of the Transfer of Property Act are not confined to usufructuary mortgages where the mortgagee obtains possession, but the words as to possession are to be read as applying to cases where it is possible from the nature of the mortgage to obtain possession

Where in order to avoid the sale of certain property charged with the payment of a maintenance allowance, one of the judgment-debtors against whom the decree for arrears of maintenance has been obtained pays off the decree, he obtains a charge on the property in respect of the amount of the shares of the other judgment-debtors which they were liable to pay under the decree. A suit to enforce such a charge is governed by Art 132 of Sch I to the Limitation Act and the period of limitation begins to run from the date of the payment by the plaintiff. So far, however, as a claim to interest on the amount paid by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendants is concerned, the claim would be governed by Art 115 of Sch I to the Limitation Act and not by Art 120 and interest would be recoverable only for three years

Such a charge cannot, however, be enforced as against an auction-purchaser who has purchased the property in good faith for value without notice O QAMAR JAHAN BEGAM v. MUNNIF MIRZA, 12 O. L. J 313; 2 O W N. 413; A I R. 1925 Oudh 613 559

Subsequent filing of valid vakalatnama, effect of—Secretary, Municipal Committee signing vakalatnama—Ratification by President, effect of—Extension of time

There is no authority for the proposition that because once a vakalatnama has not been objected to, it is good for all purposes and that an appeal filed with that defective vakalatnama is properly filed. Nor does a new power-of-attorney validate an appeal so far as the time for filing an appeal is concerned. But in these matters a Court should not be too meticulous especially, when a person on whose behalf the appeal was filed has accepted or ratified the action of the person who filed the appeal on his behalf.

Therefore, where a Municipal Committee or its President has endorsed the action of the Secretary in signing the vakalatnama for filing an appeal on behalf of the Municipal Committee, and the opposite party has not objected to the vakalatnama as originally filed in the suit, it should be considered that the Secretary was empowered by the Municipal Committee or its President to instruct the Pleader and had authority to sign the vakalatnama on behalf of Municipal Committee.

Under the above mentioned circumstances, provisions of s. 5 of the Limitation Act may also be invoked, if necessary, for extending the time for filing the appeal. L ALLAH BAKSH v. MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, A I R 1926 Lah. 223 966

The vendor can show that he could have supplied the goods contracted for either from the open market or from any other source and in either case he would be entitled to maintain a suit for damages for wrongful repudiation.

In such a case if the vendor has got a deposit from the vendee towards the contract, he is not entitled to keep the whole amount of deposit irrespective of actual damages suffered. Where the actual damage suffered is less than the amount of deposit, the vendee is entitled to refund not only of the amount of difference between the two, but also to interest thereon. M MANEPALLI SATANARAYANAMURTHI v. A natural stream passing through a jungle area fell into a tank and then flowed out in a defined channel into a second tank, the water of which had been used by the plaintiff for more than 60 years for the irrigation of his lands. The outlet from the first tank had fallen into disrepair several years ago and the Government then proposed to repair the breach in such a manner as to stop the flow of the water from the first tank into the channel which conducted the water into the second tank from which the plaintiff had been irrigating his lands;

Held, (1) that the channel system of the two tanks having formed a permanent feature of the irrigation system of the country and not being intended to be temporary and the plaintiff having utilized water for the use of his fields for more than 60 years, he was entitled to the continuance of that flow into the second tank;

(2) that the Government were entitled to repair the breach in the outlet from the first tank inasmuch as there was nothing to show that in spite of the lapse of many years since the date of the breach, the Government had at any time abandoned the idea of restoring the breach or that they intended the state of disrepair to be permanent;
